Farm and Garden

FARMING IN ALASKA.

The Possibilities of That Territory and What Can Be Grown.

So far as topography, soil and climate determine the matter, Alaska has probably 100,000 square miles of area on which there are possibilities for farming and grazing. The larger portion of the farming land is in the interior, in the Yukon drainage, according to the department of agriculture's new bulletin, entitled "Possible Agricultural Development of Alaska."

Currants, raspberries, gooseberries, strawberries, blueberries and cranberries are plentiful in Alaska. Varieties of wheat, oats, rye, barley, potatoes and many other vegetables have matured every season since the department started its work at its two most northern experiment stations. The department has four stations. One is on the Yukon within seventy-five miles of the arctic circle, another is also in the interior, while there is one in the southeastern and another in the southwestern portion of the territory.

It has been positively demonstrated that forage crops may be grown in the southwestern and central portions as well as potatoes and other garden vegetables. Chicken raising is also proving feasible. It has also been estimated that a great number of farm products are shipped in that might easily be raised on the ground.

The new bulletin on Alaska, while citing so many optimistic facts, also warns the homesteader that there are many difficulties to be encountered.

On the south coast, where the climate is mild, tillable land is scarce because of the proximity of the mountains to the shore line. Elsewhere in Alaska the winters are long and very cold, and frostproof buildings must be provided for shelter of family and stock.

The swampy character of much of the surface of Alaska makes it a great breeding ground for mosquitoes and gnats, which are almost intolerable pests to both man and beast. It also makes drainage a prerequisite in order to remove the surplus water so that the land can be worked, raise the temperature of the surface soil, lower the frost line, facilitate the decay of the accumulated organic matter and bring about chemical changes which will transform the soil from a very acid condition to one much less so. Nature requires much time for this last process.

Where the vegetable accumulations are largely moss this must be destroyed either by burning or by carting it from the land, for if plowed under it decays very slowly and seems to have an injurious effect on most crop plants.

The timber growth, which occurs on practically all the land suitable for tillage, must, of course, be cleared from the land.

All this work—building houses and barns, draining, clearing land of moss and timber—is very slowly accomplished in the short outdoor working season if done single handed by the homesteader and costly, almost prohibitively so if hired labor is used, because of the high wages and living expenses.

Lack of general transportation which would open up the country, of local wagon roads, schools, churches and other features of present day life and of the markets in which to sell farm products and from which to obtain home supplies and farm equipment are deterrent features at present, but they will disappear in time.

The federal homestead laws extend to Alaska, excepting that, instead of 160 acres, 320 may be filed upon. Very little of the available land has been surveyed, but that work is now in progress. One may locate on unsurveyed land, file a claim and establish lines by metes and bounds, but he cannot secure a title until a survey has been made by an authorized surveyor and the survey approved. If the survey is made in advance of that made by the government it is done at the expense of the homesteaders, and that is heavy.

To Each Age Its Problems.

It is not enough that we leave our institutions as our fathers shaped them. They knew little or nothing of the conditions which we face. Sufficient unto the age is the work thereof. It is not the right of any generation to project its will into the future, but it is the duty of each generation to adjust its institutions to meet its own needs.

Men need not wait until death to realize many of their ideals. They can have things here on earth which their fathers associated with the millennium. They need no longer overwork nor go cold and hungry nor suffer from pestilence or even famine. Machinery has provided the possibilities of a new life. When all of these possibilities are realized—when no one is overworked, cold or hungry, when all are leading joyous, purposeful lives—adjustment will be complete—welfare will be universal.—From "Social Sanity," by Scott Nearing

The Marlin Model 20 REPEATING RIFLE

You can buy no better gun for target work and all small game up to 200 yards.

Without change of mechanism it handles .22 short, long or long-rifle cartridges perfectly. The deep Ballard rifling develops maximum power and accuracy and adds years to the life of rifles.

The solid top is protection from defective cartridges—prevents powder and gases from being blown back. The side ejection never lets ejected shells spoil your hunt and allows quick, accurate repeat shots. With simple take-down construction, removable action parts,—least parts of any .22—is the quickest and easiest to clean. A great vacation rifle. Ask any gun dealer.
