FOREST SERVICE INCREASES GRAZING AUTHORIZATIONS.

District Forester George H. Cecil, of Portland, announces that the total number of cattle, horses, sheep, and goats authorized to graze on the National Forests of Oregon and Washington during the season of 1918 are 202,950 head of cattle and horses and 1,206,800 head of sheep and goats, an increase of 16,810 cattle and horses and 44,000 head of sheep and goats over the figures of 1917. This increase in cattle is due to increased carrying capacity of the range, while the increase in sheep is made possible by the discovery of new ranges and readjustments of boundaries on the old ranges. Because of war conditions and the heavy demand for meat and wool, extra stock was grazed last year to the extent of 19,478 head of cattle 29,102 head of sheep over 1916. The increase in cattle authorizations for the last four years has been 70,000 head.

It is the desire of the Forest Service that ranges be used at this time to the extreme of their carrying capacity. In addition to the increase in the number of stock run on the ranges there has been an increase in value; due to the improved grade of animals turned to the range. Stock growers and the Forest Service cooperate to bring about better range conditions both as concerns the range itself and the grade of stock carried. Well-blooded stock use no more range than scrubs, and bring much larger returns on the market.

Five hundred gallons of oil had to be applied to the hides of Ringling Brothers' twenty-seven elephants to get them ready for the summer season. Why not hooverize on elephants?
