THE CONDITION OF RUSSIA.

What few glimpses we get through the cloud which veils Russia from the Western peoples, show us a scene of utter confusion. They reveal a nation tossed in revolution, all its orderly life at an end. It is a mighty people given over to cold, starvation, cruel military domination.

In Eastern Russia there is scarcely food or clothing to be had at any price. Siberia is better off for food, but its transportation is impossible, as the trans-Siberian railroad has been worn and neglected to such an extent that it is well nigh useless.

At the time of the Russian revolution the country was not ripe for democracy. A true democracy implies the ability for self-government, and that the illiterate hordes of Russia had had no opportunity to gain. There was no available halting-place between autocracy and red anarchy.

The Allies will not be doing their duty unless they take some measures for helping Russia to food and fuel, to an opportunity for general education and to a settled government.

And with all the humorous recollections of the humble dainty—the Nut—we must—from now on look upon its shelly skin as a two-fold foretold of the Creator. Firstly, to protect the kernel in the nut; secondly, to protect privates and Colonels from the gas escapades of another specie of Nuts found between the Rhine and the Baltic Sea.
