A RISKY BUSINESS

The Bank Cashier who is secretly plunging on "borrowed" money and hoping the market will "break right" before the bank examiner comes around, may think he is a sure enough gambler, but he should go to farming; his sporting blood would get a lot of circulation without him having to break any laws, or risk the penitentiary.
 For instance, you have one good brood mare, and you take a day off in the middle of harvest time and escort said mare ten miles through the heat and dust, to the best stallion in the county. And you pay $25 for your visit.
 In due time, if you are lucky, there comes a colt, and you about live with that colt.
 And you give it the best of care, and break it to the halter, and coddle the mare all through the work season on its account.
 And the colt grows and promises to be a great big fine husky.
 And when that colt is about a year and a half old some cold evening it doesn't come up to the barn from the wood pasture, and next morning it isn't there, and you take a look and discover said colt in the bottom of a canyon with a 60-foot log on top of it.
 The colt is dead and you never will know just how it got under that log.
 Common enough little farm incident.
 Almost as common as hall, or hog cholera; more common than hoof and mouth disease, or glanders, though they are fairly regular visitors.

 And it is always the good colt or horse or hog that succumbs.
 We never knew a mean, hammer headed, leather mouthed, white eyed, barking son of a mongrel to even catch a bad cold.
 And a razor back hog will celebrate his centennial, if left alone in the swamp.
 Job was one of the early farmers who left a record of a typical rural season of hard luck. Only they made the story come out a lot prettier in his case, even to sons-in-law, than do many of our suburban jobs.
WORTH $50.00 A BOTTLE
 Wm. Barnes, San Antonio, Texas., writes: "Foley's Honey and Tar has been worth $50.00 a bottle to me. I had 'the flu,' followed by pneumonia, which left me weak, with a persistent cough. The cough hung on. Some one advised Foley's Honey and Tar. I have completely recovered and do not cough at all."
 Sold by Reed Bros.
 Great Britain is planning the development of aircraft for conveying passengers, mail and freight. It is stated that by this means the London mail could be conveyed to Calcutta in four days as against sixteen the minimum at present.
 President Wilson was not so immersed in high society but that he could give some attention to the mariae workers' strike.
