Dr. Liebknecht's death causes us to reflect on the constant hazard attending the life of a revolutionist. The only thing which offsets it is the fact that such a life does not contain a dull moment.

Conservation of dress material was urged upon women and they adopted narrow skirts. Now the railroads are finding fault because, owing to the narrow skirts, the trains are delayed an average of seventeen seconds at each stopping place. What is to be done? Will the women of America set in a breadth or must the timetables continue to suffer?
