COLLECTIVE BRAINS

There is no dearth of brains in this town. We have an abundance, and to spare.

But they are mostly individual brains, operating individually and for the benefit of the individual.

What we need is collective brains—the brains of many individuals who co-operate in enterprises for the common good of all.

Much can be accomplished through the collective use of the brain power of this town, but little can be expected if each individual centers his brain upon his own individual pursuits and refuses to permit it to function beyond that point.

Individual operation of brain power is good, but both individual and collective power is better—much better.

The man who has but few brains needs them all for himself.

Those who have been richly endowed by nature in this respect can afford to devote a portion of their mental activities toward community betterment.

Which class are you in?

Some women possess but few of this world's goods, yet they are always happy, always smiling, always radiating good cheer from day to day.

Others have wealth and power at their command, social position of the highest, unlimited time for recreation and enjoyment, and yet they are never content. A smile is a rarity, and good cheer is unknown to them.

They have, yet they have not; they are rich, yet they are destitute.

Most any woman can be happy, or discontented, as she chooses—and if she chooses.

Will power will do much, and determination will do the rest. Happiness and contentment come to those who seek it. It never hunts for a place of abode.

The fellow who is most convincing is often the one who says nothing. Even the most hardened old reprobate may be expected to repent in time—when he gets caught.

GOOD AND BAD

Social activity is good for any town. But social activity that is divided into a lot of hide bound and jealous cliques is a detriment.

Cliques breed jealousies, and jealousy creates antagonism, and antagonism is the tool that digs the grave of prosperity and achievement.

A prosperous, happy and contented community that mingles freely and unrestrictedly is a garden spot in the sands of life.

It is a haven of refuge to the weary traveler who journeys through the years toward a world where all is green—or a barren waste.

We can make such a town of this—if we will.

It will be well—if we do.

A certain man well along in years moved into a new community.

He was grading his front yard one day when a bunch of children came along. He spoke kindly to them and patted a little tot on the head.

That was his first act toward them, and from it they formed their impressions of him.

Word went out among the children that he was a nice man and good to them.

All of the children in the neighborhood became his friends. If they saw him a block away they would sing out, "Hello, Mr. S."

There was always a warm, cheerful, friendly greeting for him from the neighborhood kids.

When he patted the little tot on the head and spoke a kindly word to the others he was sowing bread upon the waters.

Now the little crumbs have grown into big loaves that never become less.

A pat and a word did it.
