Wise and Otherwise

In estimating your pay roll for the ensuing year don't forget that your wife s worth double that of your highest sularied employe. Buck up and whach up.

The man who speaks with a bitt r tongue is the first to feel its venous.

Looking truth in the face is often more profitable than pleasant. The wise man spends his money.

I. S. Geer & Co. HARDWARE

Don't blow up a storm when the wife asks you for ten bucks to spend, brother. Like ours, if she had not married she might have money of her own.

If it is true that "everybody's business is nobody's business," then the reverse should be equally true-that nobody's husiness is everybody's husiness.

It is hardly to be expected that any one official can see and take note of every little condition that needs correction in this community. That would be asking too much of men who are not paid to give their whole time to such work.

But if John Smith noted a defect and made a noise to the proper official and Tom Jones noted the same thing and made another noise, and other people kept on noting and noising, it would not be long until there would be little left to make a noise about.

Little noises coming from many sources are equal to a big roar, and big roars generally produce prompt results.

A little noting and noising hereabouts would do no harm. It might do much good. Try it.
