WILLIAM S. HART

ETHEL CLAYTON

PARAMOUNT ARTCRAFT STARS

Famous Star Has A Characteristic Role In "The Money Corral"

A big rodeo is being held at Fraley Point, Montana—a gathering of the fans, the wild riders, crack-shots, ropers, broncho busters, Indians, punchers and others—revival of the good old days. Lem Beeson, a puncher of real mettle, is anxious to get there, but his boss refuses. Lem goes anyway, to take part in a shooting contest, held in connection with the other events.

Gregory Collins, president of the one railroad in the district, is at the rodeo with his only daughter, Janet, who is decidedly 'up-stage.' Collins receives word that his vault in Chicago has been the goal of thieves for a second time, and that a watchman has been slain.

Beeson wins the shooting contest, and Collins is interested in the extent of offering Lem a job in Chicago to take care of his property. The puncher refuses. Janet is sorry because he would be 'such fun.'

With Collins' party is a pretty girl, a poor relation named Rose. Lem meets her and finding she lives with the family, decides to 'accept the offer and go East.'

Carl Bruler, confidential manager of the Collins Trust Co. Ho informs Mr. Collins on his return with Lem, that powerful rival interests are back of the vault attacks. Certain papers they are after, if obtained by them, will wreck the Collins Trust Company.

Lem takes the job of guarding the vaults and is warned away in a mysterious note. Bruler, informed of the threat, arranges a frame-up so that Lem will be led to a notorious cafe on a false clue. The puncher licks the gang and returns.

A party is in progress at the Collins' home and Janet, to make Lem the butt of the evening, drags him to the dance floor. His embarrassment is pitiful, so much so, that Rose aids him to escape. Furious at being balked, Janet upbraids Rose savagely and she decides to leave. She meets Lem and tells him. He tells her he is also sick of this life and is going back to the mesas of the West. They are almost confessing their mutual love, when Janet appears, and tells Lem her father wishes to see him. Lem says he is going to quit, but agrees to come to the office in the morning.

The papers of such great value are entrusted to Bruler, who locks them in the vault. The latter laughs at Lem for quitting. The puncher says nothing. There is a new watchman that night.

The attack is staged. The watchman is overpowered, but when the crooks get busy, they find someone who can shoot the center out of a dime in mid-air, waiting for them. When the police come and open the vault, the find Lem with Bruler a prisoner, and two crooks, one wounded, the other dead.

Collins offers Lem anything he wishes; he asks for Rose, and gets her. Janet apologizes, and the couple receive the finest ranch in Montana as a gift from the railroad president.

This is the story Bill Hart will appear in at the Liberty on Sunday, December 19.

SOLDIER CUT OUT MILLIONAIRE? YES, SAYS MONTE BLUE

Ethel Clayton's Leading Man Shows How It Was Done In "Pettigrew's Girl"

Can a simple, sincere, inexperienced soldier boy win a beautiful but fickle Broadway chorus girl when that girl is just on the eye of catcher as a husband a handsome young millionaire? Nine out of ten will say, "Impossible!"

But Monte Blue, as Private Pettigrew in Ethel Clayton's new Paramount starring vehicle, "Pettigrew's Girl," which will be shown at the Liberty Theatre next Wednesday says it can be done. Miss Clayton has the role of Daisy Heath, a chorus girl and Broadway beauty. Daisy has her line out to catch a rich husband.

Private Pettigrew is alone in the world, having no parents, relatives or friends. He never even had a sweetheart, but when he takes a trip to New York, from the embarkation camp at which he is stationed, he gets a front seat in Daisy's theatre. There he sees her, and throughout the whole performance he can't take his eyes off her. He arranges to meet her, and lots of things happen.

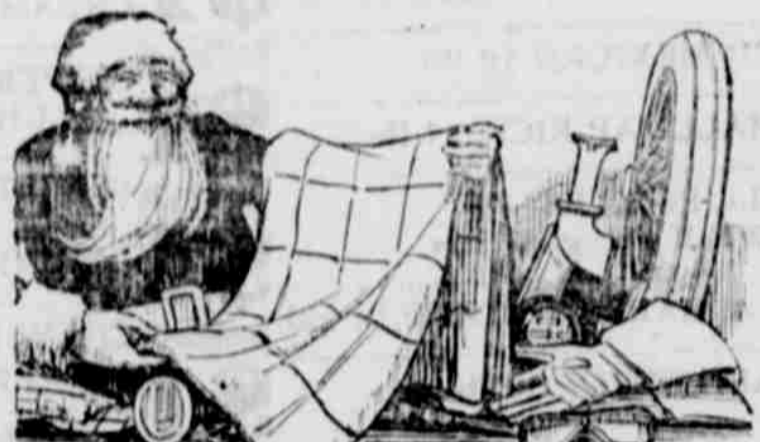

Miss Clayton again evinces her remarkable ability as an actress of unusual versatility in this picture. Monte Blue gives a delightful portrayal of the soldier. The picture was directed by George Melford. The scenario is by Will M. Ritchey, from the story by Dana Burnet. In the supporting cast are James Mason, Charles Gerard and Clara Whipple, all of whom are capable artists appearing in congenial roles.

EVER CLEAN HOUSE? SEE "SPRING" FARCE

New Paramount-Carter De Haven Comedy Highly Enjoyable

Did you ever clean house and do your own decorating in the glad, spring time? If you did, you will enjoy the new Paramount-Carter De Haven comedy, "Spring," which will be presented at the Liberty theatre next Wednesday. This is one of the

You Please a Motorist Most With an Accessory Gift for His Car

We learned many seasons ago that the real acceptable gift to every motorist was some special or accessory for his car. That's why we made a special effort this year to have our stock bright and new at Christmas time.

But just because it is Christmas season we have not marked up. Instead we are offering many bargains.

- Present him or her with a:
- Tire Tube
- Robe
- Tool kit
- Spot light
- Gas Book
- Windshield cleaner
- Vulcanizing outfit
- Set of Chains
- Flash Light
- Foot Warmer
- Radiator Cover
- or something else for his car.

Universal Garage Co.

most enjoyable comedies of the De Haven repertoire thus far produced and film fans generally have a delightful treat in store for them.

In this comedy, the De Havens are seen as a young married couple who have plenty of trouble when they begin their usual spring house refurbishing. They try to do the job with the aid of a book, but the scheme fails to work and many complications ensue, all of which are mirth provoking to a degree. It is a story that will be enjoyed by every married couple who have had similar experiences. The story was written by Mr. De Haven and the picture was directed by Charles J. Parrott.
