TWO FARM BOYS WILL RULE AT WHITE HOUSE

Everett Sanders, New Secretary to President Coolidge, Spent His Youth In Cornfields of Indiana.

Washington, D. C., January 26—When Everett Sanders reports as private secretary to President Coolidge at the White House next Monday morning, Feb. 1, our nation's affairs will be in the hands of two former farm boys.

President Coolidge from that bleak New England farm near Plymouth Notch, Vermont and his secretary, Everett Sanders, from the waving cornfields near Coalmont and Terre Haute Indiana.

Both boyhoods were spent on the farm in the hard work of sowing, reaping and the many other hard rounds of long days, from before sunup 'til after sundown. No doubt many who read these lines now know the farm day and the demands each new dawn make. Perhaps they can gain inspiration in knowing that Calvin Coolidge and Everett Sanders know from first hand contact all of these labors, having struggled in youth with the same exacting tasks.

The retirement of C. Bascom Slempp as Secretary to President Coolidge and the selection of Everett Sanders came as the result of Mr. Slempp's resolve to get back to private business. It has been known for some time that our first millionaire secretary to a president was tired of his job since things politically had failed to move as he had hoped.

It is no secret that Mr. Slempp aspired to a place in the president's family as a cabinet member. It was thought that his ability to line up Southern delegates for Coolidge would be rewarded with a higher post. However, many things interfered with that program. Wm. M. Butler beat him out with the president as chairman of the Republican National Committee. Then Harry New decided to remain as postmaster-general, the job it had been assumed Slempp aspired to.

Sanders Has Struggled Up from Poverty
Sanders has experienced a romantic career of poverty and must have been reluctant to interrupt his plans, which at last promised much, to become secretary at approximately the same salary he was receiving as congressman.

Whereas, Slempp is wealthy, Sanders is not. Sanders could have been re-elected to congress from his district last fall but he declined to run, announcing that he desired to get back to law and attain a bit of financial independence.

Sanders' father, Rev. James Sanders, was a farmer, when he was not preaching in Indiana. The boy worked—and worked hard on the farm until he was full grown. He got such schooling as was possible in the intervals between ploughing, sowing, reaping and other farm work.

But he was ambitious. Finishing the district school he managed to scramble through the State Normal School, taught school for three years and then by waiting on tables and other such menial work, he managed to get a law education at the University of Indiana, graduating in 1907. Then he took up the practice of law.

Finally he entered politics and gained first state office as assistant Attorney General of Indiana. Then he aspired higher and finally entered the race as representative of the Fifth Indiana district and was elected to congress. He served four terms in Washington.

Sanders Popular with G. O. P. Party Leaders
All of his congressional colleagues are for him. He was a regular administration man at all times and was one of Nick Longworth's most reliable lieutenants.

He gained first national prominence during the Cleveland convention when after Lowden and Borah declined to accept the vice-presidential nomination, a boom was started for him. Senator Watson of Indiana, an aspirant for the presidential nomination, refused to sponsor the boom, so finally as a compromise, Dawes was nominated.

Everett Sanders was born near Coalmont, Ind., March 8, 1882. He will celebrate his 43rd birthday, just four days after the inauguration of President Coolidge. He was married to Miss Ella Neal of Terre Haute, Indiana, in 1903. Mrs. Sanders is very popular in congressional circles and already has a host of friends in Washington.

taking up quarters at the boarding house, where he soon falls in love with the girl.

But a broker, also in love with the girl, makes it appear that the prince was the man who caused her father's financial ruin and also exposes the fact that he had to buy the magazine to get her stories printed. This causes an estrangement, which, however is speedily patched up by the turn of circumstances and everybody is happy at the finish.

THEN HE SHOT HER

THOMAS MEIGHAN IN "A PRINCE THERE WAS"

Thomas Meighan, Paramount star, is supported by Mildred Harris, former Lois Weber star, in "A Prince There Was" which comes to the Liberty theatre next Wednesday for one night only.

Mr. Meighan puts over some strong emotional acting in this screen adaptation of the famous George M. Cohan stage success, and Mildred Harris is a most capable leading woman. Mr. Meighan plays a rich young idler and Miss Harris a young writer, who formerly lived in luxury, but with her father's ruin and suicide is forced to write for a meagre living, with poor success. Little Charlotte Jackson, in the role of the little boarding house drudge, goes to the rich man and asks him to "intercede" for the girl, which the rich man does, pretending he is an assistant magazine editor and
