THE "FREE TRADE" CRY.

Being wholly unable to meet the arguments for a reduction of our burdensome tariff taxation contained in Cleveland's message,—especially in view of that plank in the republican national platform of 1884, pledging that very thing, to wit:

"The republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff by such method as will relieve the taxpayer, without injuring the laborer or the great productive industries of the country."

—the partisan republican press of the country is raising the "free trade" cry. In Louisiana, for example, they are raising the howl that sugar is to be put upon the "free list;" in Georgia and Mississippi the cry is "free rice;" it is "free lumber" in Maine and other states where the pine forests flourish; "free iron," in Missouri—and "free wool" in Oregon. That this "free trade" cry is the sheerest nonsense, is evident to even the most casual observer. While "tariff for revenue only" is an old democratic doctrine, there is not a "free trade" advocate in the democratic party. Even Watterson and Hurd, who have so long and persistently fought the "high protective tariff" iniquity, make no such demand. More money is every year exacted from the people than is necessary for the support of the government. This money lies idly in the treasury, "withdrawn from the people's use," an object of the schemes of speculators. A reduction—not an abolition—of the tariff is clearly the only existing remedy for this state of affairs, and is one of the crying needs of the hour. This was recognized by both of the great political parties in their respective platforms of 1884, and reform promised. The democratic party is endeavoring to carry out the promise contained in its platform—which was to "revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all—not to injure any domestic industries—and with due regard to American industries." In his message to congress, President Cleveland sets forth plainly the necessity for not only a reduction of the tariff, but the equal necessity for doing the work carefully and wisely, so that business interests fostered and protected for 25 years, may not be injured. It is a reduction only that is contemplated, and if carefully and gradually brought about, "in a spirit of fairness to all"—as we doubt not will be done—we venture to assert that neither the patriotic cane and rice growers of the southern states, the manufacturers of New England, nor the wool producers of Oregon will be heard to complain.

This talk about the President's message being a free trade document! Why, it has taken the republican tariff over 25 years to foster into existence a system of protection which has permeated almost all the different sections of our Union and is supporting some of our greatest manufacturing and producing interests; and if the democrats can bring us back in 25 years to where we started they will do well. Under the President's plan it will take about that length of time, as he advises congress to keep in mind the interests of the American laborer and manufacturer. He warns us not to think of free trade or protection in the proposed readjustment of the tariff. This, indeed, so far from a free trade message, that he apologizes for continuing the system of protection on the grounds that existing interests must be preserved.—World, Portland.

A GENERAL report is rife in the department of interior to the effect that Sparks will be restored to the position of commissioner of general land office.

CHAS. H. KNOX, for fifteen years a member of the republican county committee of the 21st assembly district, New York, gives the following reasons for resigning his position, and withdrawing from his party:

"My sympathies have been growing away from the republican party for some time. I think the objects for which it was organized have been accomplished, and am aware of no issue before the people on which it is entitled to support.

I believe that the civil war and all questions growing out of it have been decided, and am opposed to viewing the south as a conquered province ever to be reminded of her defeat and that her people were "rebels." The recent incident of the battle flags shows how a noisy and conspicuous portion of the republican party is willing, for political effect, to fan into flame sectional hatred. On the tariff I also find myself opposed to the republican party; it is not wise nor proper to keep up war taxes in time of profound peace. Not only is money unnecessarily taken from the people but a great surplus leads to improper expenditures.

In regard to pensions; No one believes more than I do in liberal pensions to the brave men who fought our country's battles, but I am persuaded that the honest soldiers do not approve of the greatly increased pensions provided for by the bill the President vetoed.

In 1884 I hesitated to support Mr. Cleveland, for I feared the effect on the business of the country of changing the party in power; but I can perceive no ill effects to business by his election. He has proved himself to be honest, energetic and faithful. I am in favor of his re-election, and I think him entitled to the votes of candid citizens. Holding these views, it will be apparent to you that I cannot, with self-respect, longer act with the republican party, which has honored me and which I leave with regret."

It has been circulated throughout the country by means of the Associated Press, that President Cleveland is lending his aid towards the carrying of Oregon for the democracy at the next election. Of course the story is simply a sensation and was manufactured for effect. But since we come to think about it, there are grave doubts about the state going republican at the June election. In fact we consider the chances fully even. Oregon is a doubtful state at best, and owing to her small electoral vote no great effort has ever been made to carry it in a presidential campaign for either party. If a good ticket nominated at the State Convention, and a platform adopted in harmony with the President's message, we know of no reason why the ticket should not be successful, and that without any federal interference.—Newport News.

Clippings from Exchanges.

Oswego Gazette:

An old man known as Dutch John aged 70 years, wandered away in the mountains and, although searched for, was not found for two days and nights, when he was almost frozen and starved to death.

Cascade Sentinel:

Among the expenditures on account of the Peruvian canal is the sum of $11,000,000 for quinine.

THE Russian war scare was the result of Bismarckian tactics to secure the voting of military measures by the Reichstag. Austria also availing herself of the opportunity to increase her military strength.

Sunday Welcome:

On all sides the belief is expressed that the business outlook for the next year or two is very encouraging. The past few years have demonstrated that a change in the administration of the country is not productive of panic or stagnation, so the feeling of dread, usually prevalent when a great campaign approaches, is missing just at present.

Oregon Review:

THE defeat of the amendment for the time of holding elections leaves Oregon the first state to hold an election in 1888. The election will be watched with much interest, because it is generally conceded that the republican party is badly demoralized, and the probability of a democratic victory is flattering. A democratic victory in this state next June would be a big boom for democracy, and it behooves the party to place men in nomination whom the entire party can and will support.

Democrat's Magazine:

For the first time in the history of the United States the Post Office Department, during the past year, has been self-supporting. This happy result has been brought about by the untiring work of Postmaster-General Vilas. He has conducted his department on business principles. In his annual report, he states that the deficiency in 1868 amounted to $6,900,000. This was reduced over $3,000,000 in 1887, and in a few months the whole deficiency will be made up.

Eugene City Guard:

If our local papers were liberally paid for advertising the advantages of our state and thousands of copies sent East to people who are tired of living there, then our country and our state would soon be filled with worthy homeseekers. We want our state filled with honest, industrious, prosperous people. Let our people advertise our advantages by contributing to the support of their local papers. Herald the advantages of our state and soon the tide of immigration will vastly increase and a grand boom will be the consequence. Not only a boom, but homeseekers can procure a home in a mild climate, a fertile, healthy, and prosperous country. Our climate is mild in winter, having but little snow and cold weather; and again, in summer the weather is cool and tranquil. In fact, and in few words, Oregon is a haven of security for the rich man and a paradise for the poor man."

The Portland World:

THE telegraph informs us that President Cleveland is preparing to take a personal interest in all of their boys to secure a large majority in order to Oregon, which he hopes will enable the democrats as to carry the election next June.

The above is clipped from an editorial in the State Journal, of Eugene City. Personally, we are accustomed, from long years of political experience, to republican prevarication and misrepresentation, and naturally expect it, particularly in the partisan press. But the readers of the Journal must not be led into the error of believing such ill reports about our president. It is true that our congressional delegation (all repubs.) started a rumor over the republican wires that Mr. Cleveland was much interested in the approaching election in Oregon. This is all the truth in the Journal's statement. Even Messrs. Dolph, Mitchell and Hermann do not vouch for the above rumor. As to the "taxing of eastern officeholders," why, that came into the columns of the Journal "duly free," without any regard for the facts, or recollection of Sapphira and her lord. After Mr. Goldsmith's emphatic disclaimers, this chestnut of Dolph & Co.s should be rung out.

American Grocer:

THE "American Grocer" is a business journal circulating among business men of all shades of political belief in every state and territory in the Union. Consequently we have no partisan politics, although we and our subscribers, if the communications we receive are any indication, take a warm interest in politics which have a bearing upon the welfare of business. A few months ago, when we seemed to be upon the verge of a financial crisis, and business men were being squeezed by money-lenders because so much of the circulating medium of the country was locked up in the treasury surplus, we said it was the duty of every business man to impress upon his member of congress that the reduction of our revenue was a necessity paramount to all others. This opinion is now emphasized by the annual message of President Cleveland to congress, in which he ignores all other topics and mentions this alone. The sturdy common sense of President Cleveland was never better illustrated. The writer of this article opposed his election to the presidency, but we are free to confess that he has made, thus far, a good and patriotic president of the whole people; that he has been exceptionally level-headed on most subjects; and while we do not agree with him on all points, if he were again a candidate for the presidency to-day, we should feel that the business interests of the country would be safer in his hands than in those of any member of the opposite party who has thus far been prominently mentioned.

State Rights Democrat:

MR. BLAINE in 1871, while a member of the lower house of Congress, advocated a repeal of the duties on salt and coal. Therefore Blaine is a free trader. See? Nearly all the republicans in the country are in favor of putting sugar on the free list. Therefore nearly all the republicans in the country are free traders. See? Very many republicans in and out of Congress are free traders. See?

OREGON is one of the largest and most fertile of the whole sisterhood of states. The attention of all the United States will be drawn to it now in connection with the completion of the great railroad reaching out to San Francisco. Its area exceeds 95,000 square miles, or more than double that of New York. It is equally as fertile and has a climate as genial and as equable as that of Georgia or Alabama. With the exception, perhaps, of citrous fruits, sugar-cane and cotton, there is nothing that is grown within the whole area of the United States that cannot be raised in it. The grape grows in the southern portion, and even the orange, we believe, can be raised successfully in the southern portion of Willamette valley. Were it populated as is New York state it would to-day have twelve million of people within its confines, while its chief city would be one of the greatest in the world
