

THE LAST LAUGH.

Continuation of the Congregation. The Wisdom of the Innocents. Adjoining an out-of-the-way, but favorite summer resort, is a little Chapel in which religious services are held occasionally...

A visiting divine consented to preach one sabbath last summer, and, notice being given, quite a congregation of hotel guests and resident neighbors assembled...

"The old lady will probably never know why she caused such a sensation here. She lived in the neighborhood and being accustomed to the pronunciation of 'curse,' she said it that way."

"Homespun people often run counter to some of the common customs, or time-worn prejudices of society, and are laughed at for it. Sometimes they are right, and society is wrong."

When new and valuable ideas are evolved in the progress of the world's thought, those who first believe in them are often subjected to ridicule. But it is those who believe who have occasion to rejoice.

OF GENERAL INTEREST.

The editor of the Knoxville Republican advertised for the photograph of a woman of the name of Mrs. Du...

A healthy-looking tramp at Bangor asked a woman if she would give him a dinner. She told him it wasn't her luncheon hour, but he said...

"Mrs. Eliza Merritt, of Gainesville, Ga., who is now an inmate of the insane asylum at the same place, was the possession of the family for many generations. It was brought from Holland long before the revolutionary war, and had been in the family for several generations before that."

LATE SHIPWRECKS OFF CAPE HORN.

Extract of letter from David James (late master) of the bark Colorado of Glasgow—Having left our ship on Staten Island, on the 5th of July last, and having saved neither effects nor provisions, we were then compelled to travel over the island for ten days, subsisting on nothing but shellfish and seaweed...

"This five-dollar gold piece gave me this mornin' is counterfeit!" said a vagabond to James T. Brady, the late wit lawyer...

CARL DUENDER'S PLAINT.

Detroit's Notorious Philosopher Signs For the Old German Customs. "Sergeant," said Carl Duender as he tip-toed into the station-house yesterday, "I'll let you go back to Sherman again."

"What's the matter now?" "Well, everything has too fast and too strange for here for some old man like me. Dot Yankee has a queer fellow—awful queer. Some men come into my place every day and yell out:

"Hi! der! Two pees! Set 'em open, queck! Ta! ta! Good-pye, Duender!" "Und he throws down der money, gulps down dot beer, und goes off before I can say 'Shack Robinson. It doan't like dot in Sherman. I go down a place at ashlaw walk, und I goes in py der door und speaks with esafery body. I ask him about his wife und children, his horse und cow und pig, his health und his garden, und by und by I sat down und say to dot barkeeper: 'Hans, may pe you haf some beer?' 'Yes, Herr Duender.' 'May pe it vhas good beer?' 'Yes, he vhas.' 'Hells! I try a glass.' 'Vhe goes py der cellar und prings him oop, und I take a seat und play some shekers, und I drink a leetle und wait, und drink some more und wait, und by und by it vhas twelve o'clock und I goes home to dinner."

"That's too slow, Mr. Duender." "Dot's der case that all you Yankess say. How long you pullf I vhas got married, Sergeant?" "Oh, perhaps three weeks, und I giving you seven days over the roof."

"Tree weeks! Vhy, it vhas ten y und dot vhas too soon! If I takes vone 'ar I doan't marry Mrs. Du at all! It vhas like dot: It takes y'ar to be introduced to dot girl, takes y'ar more before you like call her py her first name. May after life y'ar I take her hand und dot I like to be married, but it vhas y'ar more before she consents und v all ready."

"Too slow for me." "Und you vhas in soech a hurry dot you don't lift oout half y'ar. Dot prings me up to psychosis. Shake has run arvhay some more." "No!" "He goes last night. We haf some fuss again. Shake vhas too much like a Yankee, und I talk und talk to him und it vhas no good. Do you know Shake seals no pig dot he doan't like to haf my clothes out oafor for him any more!"

"Dot vhas possible. In der old country wooden shoes vhas all right for me. In dis country Shake likes some fine gaiters, und he shjines 'em oop mit plackin'. Some old hat vhas got good enough for me, but Shake he must go oout und puy von for tree dollar. I haf some pants mit only two holes in 'em, but Shake won't put 'em on. 'When I vhas a poy I doan't haf no pants, Shake comes to me almost every day und says he likes half a dollar or seex shillings. In der old country I play shekers or pitch horseshoes. My Shake learns how to play poker und pillians und lots of odder games, und it makes yor hair stand oop to hear him talk of base-ball und cricket. He calls me old nose-pack, und sooch, und yesterday I says my mind to put a sttop to 'em."

"Took him down cellar, eh?" "Dat's vhas I like to do. I get dot strap und tell him to come along, und he says I vhas too fresh, und he vhas gone before I get him, sergeant."

"Well!" "May pe I vhas wrong. May pe it vhas deefrent in dis country. May pe dot poy of to-day vhas not like der old oys. I doan't sleep any all night und der old women vhas vhas crying all der time for Shake, and so, if you see him, you may tell him to come back. Tell him dot we try again. If he don't say I vhas too fresh, und if he can't let me to put oop my dukes, und if he doan't keep talking about carom dots, hot grounders, Shackpots und so on I try to make it all right und get long. Shust let him dot, sergeant, und you may shently hint to him dot if he doan't get petter you pullf he vill be hung for murder. Good-pye, sergeant—may pe I vhas too oldt for dis country."—Detroit Free Press.

A Bit of Vandalism.

I sat alongside of a lady in a street car the other day on my way down town. She was elegant as to attire and intelligent as to visage. She was reading, or rather looking over, one of the leading magazines, and ever and anon, when it became necessary to move forward a page, she used her ivory finger as if she was in a glove—for a paper-cutter. Shades of Tom Dibdin! what a mess she made of it. Ripped, torn, ragged and jagged, by the time we were half way down town that poor magazine was a sight to behold. True, you're right, it was her magazine, but my feelings happened to belong to me.

"This five-dollar gold piece you gave me this mornin' is counterfeit!" said a vagabond to James T. Brady, the late wit lawyer. "I didn't give you a gold piece. I gave you a quarter, my good fellow." "You meant to give me a quarter, but you gave me this by mistake." "Oh! well, then you may keep it for your honesty!" said the caustic wit.—N. Y. Ledger.

"Behind the Scenes.—Her appetites delicate: She can eat out to-day: Whether best has gone away."

"Chicago is Best.—Boggar's Wife—"August, why are you taking off your wooden leg?"—Boggar—"Darling, I am only going to strap it on the other foot; one gets tired of hopping about all day long on the same leg."

"The island is situated in a region of practical ice, snow and storms, and at all the best it was as fresh and dry as if in the most healthy locality."

MARGARET COLEMAN.

How This Brave Irishman Saved Secretary Seward. Among Mr. Sumner's servants the one whom he most highly valued was an elderly Irish woman, Margaret Coleman. She was his housekeeper for the last two years, and now becomes a historic character.

Prior to entering Mr. Sumner's service Margaret was of the household of William H. Seward. When, on the 14th of April, 1865, the night of the assassination of President Lincoln, an attempt was made on the life of Mr. Seward, she was one of those in charge of his room, he then being confined to his bed from the effects of a fall from his carriage. Payne, the would-be assassin, was met by Mr. Frederick Seward at the head of the stairs. After wounding him severely and leaving him seemingly dead, Payne passed over his body to reach the room of his father. The noise had notified Margaret, who was in her own room on the story above, of Payne's approach, and his object. As Payne entered the sick room, Robinson, the male nurse, then there, confronted him. Payne struck Robinson to the ground with his knife, and then sprang at the Secretary. Mr. Seward was in a half-sitting posture, leaning his back against a sick-chair placed in the bed for his support. Realizing Payne's object, he pulled the bed clothing over his head for his protection. Payne struck him a number of times. One blow was so well aimed that it passed through the bed clothing, through his cheek into his neck on the right side, and another on her head. She was not severely hurt, but she was hurled against the door-jamb with such force as to break her collar-bone. Major Seward was slightly cut in several places. But none of the women except Margaret was in any injured. Payne, after cutting his way out, mounted his horse and escaped. Meantime Mr. Seward had apparently disappeared, and for a moment it was thought that the assassin had thrown him out of the window. He had, however, rolled himself in his bed clothing, and fallen between the bed and the wall, but was so suspended by the clothing that he had not reached the floor. Margaret pulled him up, unrolled him, now nearly smothered in the blankets and the blood, and assisted in doing what was necessary before she found out how much she herself was injured. She recovered, however, sufficiently to continue to act as head nurse to Secretary Seward, to Mr. Frederick Seward and Mrs. Seward, who never recovered from the shock of that night, and who died in Margaret's arms, and, finally, as nurse to Miss Fannie Seward. She saw her pass away within the year.

When Mr. Fish succeeded Mr. Seward, as Secretary of State, he took certain of the Seward servants, who agreed to stay with him until Mrs. Fish brought her own establishment to Washington. So Margaret remained with him, as Secretary of State for six months, and then went to Mr. Sumner, with whom she remained until his death. The arrangement was particularly agreeable to the ladies whom Mr. Sumner received, as most of them had been accustomed to her friendly ministrations when visiting at the Seward and Fish houses.—Cincinnati.

A Sample of Turkish Justice.

You have often read wondrous and lying tales of justice administered with unerring judgment in Turkey. Here is a true story of Turkish justice: A drover complained to a cross-legged magnate at Rodosto that he had been robbed of two oxen. Three Turkish gardmies were sent to recover the property, and soon discovered two peasants going off with two oxen. One of the men was shot dead. The other escaped, and the policeman hastily buried their man and came back in triumph with two oxen. But the man said those oxen had not been stolen from him, and it was plain that the peasant had been shot for driving his own cattle. The situation was uncomfortable but Turkish diplomacy fixed things. Another man was found to swear he had been robbed of the two oxen, and they were turned over to him, which relieved the gardmies from guilt. They did not go unpunished, however, for they had buried the dead peasant without first washing the body, which in Turkey is a crime except in case of a soldier killed in battle. For that negligence they were imprisoned.—Levitt Herald.

"Cholly.—'Did you hear about that bank smashup yesterday, Gawge? Cashier ran away with the funds.' Gawge.—'Common occurrence; I don't pay any attention to such reports any more.' 'I tell you, if a man has got any surplus cash nowadays it stands him in hand to put it where he knows it will stay. By the way, can you let me have a ten this mornin'?' 'Really, dear boy, you offer me such excellent advice about putting money where I know it will stay that I am almost sorry I have no surplus funds.'"

PRACTICAL CAUTIONS.

An Ounce of Prevention From the Insurance Companies. Every year millions of dollars' worth of the material resources of the country are swept away by fire. This loss is an absolute one. It can not be replaced and does not feel that if adequately insured, but, nevertheless, with every fire the country at large is poorer by the amount of the loss.

It is alarming to note that in spite of our continually improving facilities for fighting fire, and the increasing numbers of fire-proof buildings, the gross losses throughout the country grow steadily greater year by year. Below is an accurate tabulated statement of the country's yearly loss by fire, which is not pleasant reading: 1878.....$64,313,000 1883.....100,140,000 1879.....71,700,000 1884.....110,900,000 1880.....74,400,000 1885.....104,900,000 1881.....81,300,000 1886.....124,900,000 1882.....84,500,000 1887.....136,000,000

Our national resources are so immense that the country has not yet seriously felt this drain, but it is evident that the time must come when it will feel it. This is especially true if we take into consideration the amount of money spent annually in fighting fire. Firework's fire department alone costs more than $1,000,000 annually; its insurance patrol more than $100,000.

The principal insurance companies, actuated by such considerations, have adopted a plan which is so simple and prompt as to be effective that it deserves to have public attention called to it. They have printed and propose to distribute gratuitously through every building in the city, a set of "Fire Cautions." Their idea is that if these are posted in conspicuous places in office buildings, factories, tenement houses and the like, the practical cautions they embody will not be apt to be forgotten. Certainly, if they are remembered and always carefully observed, accidental fires would be few and far between.

The cautions are given below. It can be seen that they are sensible, practical and intelligible. Don't allow stoves or heaters on your premises which are not securely set on stone, cemented brick or metal, and so on that all woodwork near the stove or pipes is carefully protected with metal.

Don't allow any loose-jointed gas brackets on your premises which could be swung against woodwork, or any gas brackets without wire screens or globes, if hay, straw, light materials or window curtains are near them. Don't allow any electric lights or wires on your premises which are not properly protected with metal.

Don't allow steam-pipes to be in contact with wood or inflammable material. Don't allow any kerosene oil lamps to be filled after dark. Filling lamps near a fire is dangerous. Don't forget to keep the lamps cleaned, and wicks in good order. When the oil is low it generates gas, which is liable to explode.

Don't allow benzine, gasoline, naphtha or explosives in your place. Your insurance policy prohibits it. Don't allow ashes to be put in a wooden box or barrel in your building. Always have an iron ash can. Don't allow any oily waste or rags to be thrown on the floor, but only in a metal can, with cover, and have them taken out of the building every night; they are self-igniting. Don't allow any greasy or oily rags or papers to be mixed up with clean clothing, or a large amount of clippings to remain in your place (even if clean and in bales) than is absolutely unavoidable.

Don't allow saw-dust to be used on floors or in spittoons. It causes many fires, ignited by cigar stumps or cigarettes. Don't allow saw-dust to be used for catching oil dripping from machines or elevator gearing. Sand is safe. Don't allow matches to be kept loose, or in paper boxes, but only in metal or earthen safes. Those lighting only on the box are safest.

Don't allow smoking on your premises where any combustible goods or materials are used. Don't fail to have your fire-buckets filled, and test hose and fire appliances from time to time. Don't allow your stairs or hallways to be blocked up or used for "storage," or rubbish, hay, straw, etc., to accumulate or remain on your premises. Don't fail to have all elevators or hoistsways provided with good traps, doors or hatches, and have these shut at night.

Don't forget to close your iron shutters at night. Don't forget that neglect and carelessness are the cause of more fires than all other things, and enforce rules to guard against them.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

"Just now a comparatively new fad has broken out among fashionables. It is installing as prime favorite, among the other antiques, the old-fashioned brass warming pan, which is now hung in the hall or library near the fireplace. They really do give a cheerful look with their brass covers, which are kept polished with dazzling brightness. They bring large prices when offered for sale. As you see, they are now used as a sort of a fire-guard, rather than being brought forth, for they possess a prize, as they are something not likely to be reproduced.—St. Louis Republician.

HIS PHOTO.

The venerable benefactor of mankind, intent upon his good works, is known as we see him here. His familiar face and form have become a trade mark, and the good he has done is illustrated in the following marvelous instance. In Jan. 17, 1883, George C. Osgood & Co., druggists, Lowell, Mass., wrote: "Mr. Lewis Danna, No. 138 Mosely St., desires to recommend St. Jacobs Oil to his afflicted with rheumatism, and desires especially to say that Orin Robinson, of Granville, Mass., a boy of 12 years, came to his house in the summer of 1881 walking upon crutches, his left leg having been bent at the knee for over two months and could not be bent back. He could not walk upon the crutches, but he had to rub on his knee. In six days he had no use for his crutches and went home well without them, and he has been well since. Jacobs Oil cured him." In July, 1887, inquiry was made of the Messrs. Osgood to ascertain the condition of the little cripple, which brought the following response: "Lowell, Mass., July 9, 1887. The poor cripple on crutches, Orin Robinson, cured by St. Jacobs Oil, is now well and returned home. The young man has been and is now at work every day at manual labor. Dr. George C. Osgood, M. D., is another remedy can make the same showing."
