≠Miss Ada Ragon, late compositor on the Roseburg Review, gave THE HERALD a fraternal call,

That Badger and Dog Fight.

Sunday the sports, their friends, and a number of spectators collected on the grass-plat back of the Texas saloon to determine whether or not the badger should longer wear the champion's belt against the best dog blood in Burns.

The day was cool, the men and dogs idle, and life altogether worth the living, and the badger, he didn't care for day, dogs, men, nor life, but presented a snarling front to all, and, like invincible James Fitz James, he cried out, as it were: "Come, come all, this hide shall fly From this tough carcass ere I die!'

Thereupon two dogs of little note and less pedigree were turned loose on him, one at a time, till he was deemed sufficiently riled up to make mince-meat of Stenger's pups Redand Dan, that were both spoiling for the fray. Dan's ambitious, fights, however, were confined to leaping the length of a tether, but "his bark was on the C" as he whooped up his comrade in canine mischiefs.

Time was called, and Red seized tle imp till his bones ought have rattled.

round, indications were all in favor of Red's finishing the Badger in the three rounds. They were separated, rubbed down (all but the badger), and rested. In the second round both came to the scratch in gallant style, but after the first grip, lost dignity and went at it nip-an-tuck, and when

Third and last round found both at the close in good spirits for another hour's fun. The referees declared a draw between Red and the Badger, and time rolls smoothly on as before, but Tex, the badger's trainer, turned him free Sunday night for a month's recreation in his native sagebrush, as reward for so ably sustaining the staying qualities of great Badger family, when in the
