A TELL-TALE WIDOW.

From Peterson's Magazine.

I had been traveling all a long summer day on the railway, and at sunset was still fifty miles from my destination. Tired enough I was, but passing through those Virginia highlands, with their noble mountains and far-reaching valleys, almost made me forget the fatigue. The day had been hot, but new life came with the breezy stir and coolness that sunset always brings. Fans were closed, books laid aside, people shifted about, and talk grew more lively. I was alone, but new life came with the breezy stir and coolness that sunset always brings.

The green world around had become gray, stars were coming out, and twilight was settling down, when we passed a house which, from its own singularity and from after circumstances, stands out so vividly in my memory. It was a tall square structure of rough stone, with a high black-shingled roof and many staring windows. It stood so close to the track—not ten steps away—as to show that it had been there long before a railroad was thought of. There was no defensive wall or paling in front, not even a porch; nothing but a few steps leading down from the great closely-shut front door—and no out buildings of any kind, no trees or shrubbery visible near it. All about stretched a wide waste field, level yet elevated, dotted with bramble-bushes, and with masses of black iron-stone sticking through the thin soil or scattered here and there. As we passed this dismal mansion, glancing upward, my eyes took in, as one sees a light-flash, something at one of the upper windows. It was no fancy; by a sort of instantaneous process, there was photographed on my brain a white, agonized, terror-stricken face at the casement, two wild hands lifted either in appeal or an effort to raise the sash, while two hands clutched the throat from behind, dragging the head back.

This I saw for one second, then, as the train glided by with a shrill whistle, I heard mingling with a scream—long, agonized blood-curdling, like a death-shriek. I sat motionless, staring with cold chills down my back; then, rushing myself, I looked about. Surely everyone else had seen and heard—but no, my own horror found no reflection on any countenance. Apparently no one had seen the vision but myself. I was sure that it could not be fancy, but still wanted another's testimony. In front of me sat a pleasant-looking woman; leaning forward, I touched her on the arm.

"Did you notice the house we passed just now?" I asked. "That queer tall house, like an old barn, standing just over the track?"

"Yes. Wasn't it dreadful-looking?"

"Very," said I. "But did you see, at one of the upper windows, a face—and someone struggling to get out?"

"Why, no. It is too dark to see anything much now, but I'm sure there was nothing."

"Didn't you hear a cry?"

"That was the engine," she rejoined, confidently.

"I heard the whistle," I said, "and a scream—that is, I thought—it must have been fancy, though."

She seemed curious, but I would tell no more. Sounding the conductor, who passed just then, I found him not only ignorant of what I had seen, but inclined to laugh at my questions. A few minutes later, the train paused at a station, and, listening eagerly, I caught the name. It was "Black Rock." Through the gathering night, we swept on our way—the house and its mystery left far behind; but increasing distance did not lessen the vivid horrible impression that my glimpse of its interior had left on me.

The visit to my Virginia friends passed delightfully and was prolonged week after week, far beyond its expected length. Not till the middle of September did I say "good bye" and start homeward, taking the same route by which I had come. I had not mentioned the occurrence just related, feeling a strange shyness about doing so; but it was not forgotten, and with considerable excitement did I look forward to passing that house again. Starting late in the evening, it was long after dark when we neared the spot. I listened for the name, and at last heard it called in the conductor's high nasal sing-song: "Black Rock station!" My heart beat loud at the sound. There was a little waiting, and the train moved on.

It was a dark night—I could not hope to see much; but, leaning through the window, I watched for the huge black outline that would at least be visible. Suddenly there came a shock, then a tremor through out the whole train, then cries and confused sounds, followed by a great crash. The car I was in shuddered like a live thing in terror and turned over on its side. I felt a sharp quick pain, a deadly sick fear, and then became insensible.

There is no need to dwell minutely on this part of my story. There had been an accident, and I—the only person seriously hurt—was carried into the nearest house: the tall dark house by the railway. My arm had been broken and badly cut. For the next two or three hours, I was partly unconscious; a sort of sick apathy—partly suffering from the operation of setting the bone. At last, I was made easy and comfortable, propped up with pillows on an immense bed, to become again inebriated—this time with sleep.

When I awoke, the sun was shining in through an old torn curtain, falling on a woman who sat near my bed, busily knitting. She did not see me awakening at first, and I had leisure to study her. Dark, gaunt and muscular, with harsh features and iron-gray hair, she was not at all charming to look at. Her expression was half sullen, half sad, with something of defiance in it, too, as one who silently protests against the universe. Presently she perceived my open eye and bent toward me.

"Where am I?" was my first question.

"At Black Rock house, near where you were hurt in an accident last night. Your arm was broken, and set by my brother, Dr. Haldane. You are safe and will be taken care of." This in a singular hard and repressed tone of voice.

My heart beat fast. "Is this the tall house—in a wide field—near the road?" I asked. "Yes, Black Rock we call the place. The station was named from it."

My first sensation was one of fear, even horror—then came a thrill of pleasant excitement. What good fortune, that had given me such a chance for fathoming my mystery. In the very house, and likely to be for weeks—aided, as it seemed, by fate—all my curiosity, my intuitive womanly keenness, my detestable instincts, were instantly on the alert. Miss Haldane seemed willing to tell what she knew, when presently I asked her some questions about the accident. The engine had struck a large stone, which had been placed there on the track, certainly by more than one person. Effort have been made, so far unsuccessful, to discover the criminal. Some of the cars were overturned into a stony hollow near the road. There was a great fright, but no one hurt so severely as myself.

I lay with closed eyes and thought. I must be detained at least a month; there was nobody to take strict account of my comings and goings, none very nearly related or intimate—I might stay indefinitely, if it would take me as a boarder. It was a morbid unhealthy feeling, I knew, but never had any project so fascinated me. Probably the only person on earth who had seen that struggle at the window, that wild swift outlook of horror and perhaps crime from this lonely house—how strange a chance was it that had brought me to it. I saw the brother, Doctor Haldane, later in the day. His face had impressed me, even amid the pain of his setting my arm—a dark harsh face, like his sister's, with compressed mouth and restless glittering black eyes.

I also saw another member of this family, a second sister, a young girl—at least much younger than Miss Haldane and of a very different type. Ah, Lucia Haldane! your face is one never to be forgotten—and never till my dying day can I think of it, of you, without a pang! She was beautiful, though, strange to say, she resembled the other two—so slight is the line of difference sometimes between beauty and ugliness. I think she would have been perfect, but for her eyes—they were too restless, too bright, the whites too plainly visible above and below their dark pupils. Her motions were restless, too, but subdued to a bird-like grace; her color was exquisite, her mouth of that ruby-red so seldom seen.

There was a curious half-frightened air about her; she had a trick of glancing over her shoulder, like a child who had just heard a ghost-story and fears to see some horrible thing. Had she really of late witnessed some awful sight, and in this very house? My suspicions were quick to ask—and it was not only our common youth and her marvelous beauty that interested me at once in Lucia Haldane. This startling backward glance of hers, interrupting her gay talk and frequent, sometimes causeless, laughter—this strange little gesture was very suggestive to me. I used to watch her, wondering what it was she saw or feared to see. She was so young, so lovely, and so innocent-looking, that no one could connect the thought of anything dark or criminal with her; but Dr. Haldane and the older sister—they were kind to me, and yet—I thought, with a shudder—they might be capable of anything.

Lucia was sometimes talkative, sometimes drooping and silent. When she chattered, I listened eagerly for some clue to my mystery, but none did she let fall. However, some outside light came to my aid. One day, a lady of the neighborhood called to see me, a bustling loquacious dame, who poured forth sympathy for half an hour, and presently when Miss Haldane left the room, began condoling with me on the subject of my loneliness.

"I am not lonely," I said. "They are all very kind."

"Oh, yes, I dare say. They couldn't be otherwise—but still, you know, they are such a strange people."

"How strange?" I asked.

"Oh, very queer people, my dear! I don't think it's all right, though they are an old family and were once rich. But it's not pride—just a natural closeness. They live shut up here in such a secluded way—just as if they had some dreadful secret to hide—visiting hardly at all."

OH, MY BACK! STOP IT NOW, SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE.
I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and have found relief only from Dr. Henley's English Dandelion Tonic. About the 15th of April I was suffering from a very violent attack that almost prostrated me in such a manner that I was bent over when I got up, or to put on my clothes, when I felt as if I were being torn apart. I immediately commenced using the tea. It had an almost miraculous effect, and to the astonishment of all the guests at the hotel, in a few days I am happy to state, that I was a new man. I will recommend the tea to all afflicted as I have been.
