HARNEY COUNTY ITEMS.

JANUARY, 21

Masks at the new drug store for sale. Notice the premiums offered by THE HERALD. Remember the Masquerade Ball in Burns, February 12th.

Mrs. Etta Horton, of our town, is just recovering from the second "round" of measles.

The Lyceum held weekly at the Poison Creek school is well attended and the discussions very interesting.

We were informed to-day that Gus Deloro was killed, on the Stauffer Ranch, by a horse, a few days ago, but did not learn any particulars.

Don't some of you "cranks" who think you know it all, come in arguing that you can't have measles the second time.

When measles are so plenty that some persons have the second or third attack, it is high time for our d—l to exclaim, "things are getting into a measlesy condition."

Mart Brenton, proprietor of the Red Front Livery Stable, is doing a good business, simply because he knows how to take care of horses, and is always at his post.

A communication, from Prosperity, is reluctantly laid over till next week for want of space. Let us have your items and letters for publication the latter part of the week, if such is possible.

To-day at 10 o'clock a m was the time set to move the county records to Harney. The citizens collected at the appointed hour, when some of them entered the clerk's office, and argued the case with the county Judge, who graciously reversed the order.

The county seat has the measles; the county records have been exposed, and we are informed by a fellow, who came from up town, that the records are showing fever-to-day; but whether they (the records) will break out with measles or cussedness is a question yet to be decided.

A father can give his young son no better present than a year's reading of the Scientific American. Its contents will lead the young mind in the path of thought, and if he treats there a while, he'll forget frivolities and be of some account, and if he has an inventive or mechanical turn of mind, this paper will afford him more entertainment, as well as useful information, than he can obtain elsewhere.

Harney county has a county court composed of members who would not exchange their opinions for those of the supreme court. The supreme court recently decided that Burns was duly elected the county seat of Harney county, and last week the county court ordered the records removed to Harney City. Might seem to be considered right in this instance.—Ochooco Review.

The January term of the county court of Harney county met and among other business transacted, was that of ordering the county clerk to move the county records back to Harney City. Matters seem to be in a great muddle, the supreme court pulling one direction and the county court another.—Long Creek Eagle.

A BLUE RIBBON.

Marion Douglas in Harper's Bazar. A ribbon of the softest blue The sweet June sky's most lovely hue, When youth and hope made all things fair: I bought it to bind up my hair; To all my life it held the key, Yet never was it worn by me. "My own my own!" I thought him then, The handsome, blithe young sailor Ben. His last "good-by" on leaving shore His gladdest greeting home once more, Were always mine. 'Twas with a thought Of him that ribbon first was bought. My heart beat high. I always knew Just when the Bonny Bride was due. "With one foot on land you sail the sea," Light laughed my cousin Jane at me. Oh, shallow-hearted, weak and vain, But full of arts, was cousin Jane. She spied my ribbon fresh and new, She snatched the length of shining blue And knotted it upon her breast. "It is the shade that suits me best; Oh, let me wear it once," she said; I bit my lip, but leaved my head. When, looking up, within the door Stood Ben, my Ben, at home once more; But oh, his gaze—why should it be?— Was turned on Jane instead of me! She'd never looked so fair before; "Twas that blue ribbon that she wore! With jealous pang I knew it then— Forever lost to me was Ben. When Love attempts his wings to try, 'Tis vain to stay him; let him fly! But, oh, I knew I need not mourn Had I myself that ribbon worn! Well, let it go. Sore Heaven's grace Needs she who is not fair of face. But 'tis its red robe makes the rose; The garment's charm for beauty goes; And that blue ribbon held the key Of all my lonely life for me.

COMMUNICATION.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Jan. 16, 1891

It is now clear that the free coinage amendment to the financial bill will receive the support of four-fifths of the democrats in the House in combination with a republican contingent, and it is reasonably certain to go through the House before the close of the session. The responsibility of its final enactment as a law will probably devolve upon Mr. Harrison whose influence so far as it has been exerted, has been in opposition to free coinage. The course to be pursued by Speaker Reed is now no longer problematical. He has decided that the measure shall have full consideration in the House, although he has by no means abandoned his own personal convictions regarding silver. He will not, in the first place, pull President Harrison's chestnuts to use a homely phrase out of the fire. In the second place, he expects the force bill to come over from the Senate before long, and he will make concessions to the silver men in order to secure their support for such bill. He finds, too, that the pressure would be greater than he could bear if he undertook to usurp the veto power by pocketing the bill, and he is willing to let it go to the President as soon as possible. It can be predicted with almost absolute certainty that the President will sign it under protest.

The fight for the passage of the force promises to begin to-day in the Senate in good earnest. Yesterday was occupied by Mr. Everts, in a speech of over three hours in length in favor of the bill, and just before the Senate adjourned Senator Hoar gave notice that to-day he would ask the Senate to remain in session until the consideration of the bill is completed. The determination has been reached to pass the bill if possible, and every effort will be made to reach this end. It is not true that the bill will to-day be antagonized by any other measure brought forward by a republican Senator. It can be stated positively that Senator Padlock does not, as has been stated, intend to call up his pure-food bill to-day. The democrats in the House are fully alive to the gravity of the situation, and share the feeling with the democratic Senators that the bill will pass the Senate. The policy of delay in the House will be more pronounced than ever. Everything in the House will now be delayed by the democrats on the least possible excuse, while the republicans are already beginning to concern themselves about the presence of a quorum of the own members.

The Indian war, which for some weeks past has occasioned considerable solicitude throughout the country because of its formidable proportions, is practically ended. The chiefs have not only come into Pine Ridge with protestations of peace, but a large delegation of them will soon be in Washington to lay their case before the Great Father, with a view to the establishment of better relations with the Government. The campaign has been an arduous one for the troops engaged, being carried on in the face of many difficulties, and at a most inclement season of the year, and fortunately the general engagement that on several occasions seemed imminent, was averted. The great question now to be settled is that of permanently maintaining the pacific conditions that have been brought about at great cost and hazard. The lesson of the war will not be lost if it shall be the means of instituting reforms that have long been needed, and impressing upon the Indians not only a sense of the power of the Government, but of its honesty and justice.

The committee, appointed to make the usual annual count of stamps in the vaults of the Internal Revenue Bureau, have submitted their report to the Secretary of the Treasury and the statistics gleaned from it are interesting as showing the vast number of stamps required to collect the revenue of the Government through this source during a single year. The report shows that there were no hand in the vaults December 28, 1889, all told, 78,865,617 stamps, and that from that date to December 29, 1890, there were received from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for issue 820,133,024 stamps, making the total number to be accounted for 899,000,641. There were delivered to collectors for issue during this period 876,068,300 stamps, leaving a balance on hand December 29, 1890, of 22,932,341 stamps, which by actual count were found by the committee to be in the vault.
