KILLED COMANCHES BY SCORES.

There has just died at this place a man who for ten years waged a most merciless war on the Comanche Indians of this region, says a Fort Laramie (N. M.) correspondent to the Cincinnati Enquirer. His career is over, but it was one of the most remarkable ever known cut side of a dime novel. In 1862 James Sanderson, and his wife and one child were crossing the country near the Arizona line with a wagon and outfit.

A band of Comanches came down upon them and killed the child and the women after horrible outages. Sanderson was tied to a post and compelled to witness the fearful scenes. After this the Indians began a series of tortures, and his life was only saved by the timely arrival of a detachment of soldiers, who drove off the savages, but not until they had used fire to such an extent that the man's face was seamed and scarred in a horrible manner.

Sanderson said little about his terrible affliction, but returned to the fort with the soldiers and remained there until he recovered his health. Then he took a solemn oath to be revenged in a manner that would make his name a terror to the Indians.

HUNTING FOR INDIANS.

He supplied himself with a rifle, revolver and ammunition, and left the fort. It was a month before he was heard of and the affair had almost passed from the minds of the officers and men, when one day Sanderson walked in and threw down a bundle containing twenty-nine scalps. He had followed the Indians and hung on their trail, killing every one that left the camp, until his presence became a veritable terror to the band.

He made no distinction between men, women and children, but killed any that he could get near to. He seemed endowed with a charmed life, for the Indians could not get near enough to him to do him harm, and he became known as the "White Spirit." The Indians became frightened, and those who were left made haste back to the home of the tribe, carrying with them the terrible tale of the Nemesis on their track. Sanderson followed them to the mountains, and went where white man had never been before.

Before his presence became known in the neighborhood he had killed a boy, a squaw and two warriors. Every time a band was sent out after him they would be sure to return after losing several members, and the Indians became afraid to go about the country alone. Within a year he had thirty-nine scalps, and said he had killed twelve more whose scalps he was unable to get. At the end of that year he raised the number to seventy-nine scalps and said that he would not return to the fort until he had 100.

KILLED TWELVE AT ONE TIME.

In July, 1864, a cloudburst occurred above the village of a band of Comanches, and the people filed into a narrow gorge for safety. The water came so suddenly that they were compelled to fly with what they could gather and run for their lives. Sanderson came upon them as they were huddled in the gorge and began firing at them from above and rolling stones down upon them. He killed twelve and wounded a great many before they could get away.

By July, 1865, he had over 100 scalps and had killed at least 140 Indians and seventy ponies. He had no idea of abandoning his quest, but was more determined than ever to wipe out the whole tribe. After the war of the rebellion, when the Government turned its attention to the Indians, a treaty was made with the Comanches, and it was stipulated by the Indians that Sanderson be called away from the country. He heard of it and for many months kept out of the way of the soldiers and continued his work of destruction, but at last was found and told that he must give up the work. He complied, but with great reluctance, and has taken advantage of every Indian outbreak since to go out and kill the savages.

Irrigation.

The irrigation of arid lands is becoming an important question for vast, unproductive regions rendered so because of the absence of moisture. As the prospects brighten for the favorable passage of a bill in Congress to this end it is noticed that the speculator, like a bird of prey, is watching to pounce down upon and appropriate for himself the lion's share of this soon to be valuable land. Along with an irrigation bill for redeeming these waste portions there should be a provision allowed possession only by those who cultivate the same. The government cannot afford to virtually create land, give it out for private individuals to speculate upon, at the exclusion of actual settlers and producers.

FORAKER MEN WORKING.

SPRINGFIELD O., December 24.—The Foraker forces are just now engaged with a plentiful supply of emissaries in working the wage-workers with might and main to turn them against Senator Sherman and are meeting, apparently, with gratifying success.

One of the agents has just left this city, after having the Springfield Trades and Labor Assembly last night pass the resolutions he furnished, which are almost identical with those passed by similar bodies in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus, Toledo, Mansfield and Dayton. These resolutions of opposition are based on Sherman's negative stand in 1882 and 1885 against the Chinese Immigration bill, in 1888 against the legal day of eight hours, and in 1884 against an important section in a bill for the establishment of a labor bureau, etc.

The emissary here was J. D. Harris, Master Workman of Phoenix Assembly, Knights of Labor, Columbus. He and J. W. Ristine, G. A. Bushnell's right-hand man were in significant conversation while he was here. Of course General Bushnell is red hot, money and all, for Foraker. One of the objects of the tour of Harris is to work up a sentiment against Sherman, which will crystallize in the presentation of resolutions denouncing Sherman at the annual meeting of the State Trades and Labor Assembly which convenes at Columbus, January 5th.

It is the opinion of labor leaders that the resolution will be passed easily, and that it will play an important part in the Senatorial campaign.—S. F. Examiner.

GAINING RECRUITS.

St. Louis, December 26.—The Post-Dispatch has a special from Laredo, Texas, which says: The news to day from the scene of trouble is to the effect that more fighting has been engaged in, with slight losses on both sides. Last night it was reported that the revolutionist had captured Camargo, and that General Sardeval was on the march with 2,000 men to join Garcia. There was some talk to the effect that General in the Mexican army had declared for the revolutionists and will march with the soldiers in his command to join the invaders. These reports are meager and cannot be traced to any particular source, but the rumors are credited by some.

A dear little bride in a railway car was like most brides in desiring to avoid identification as a bride. The husband went out to smoke. An old lady across the aisle talked to her. "You are lately married, my dear, I know," she said kindly. "Oh, no—we have been married a long time," returned the young woman, briskly.

"Ah! excuse me. You are so young, and seem so happy."

"Oh, we have been married eight—yes, eight years."

"Have you any—?"

"Oh! (blushing furiously) no!"

"Well, well! And I thought at first you were on your wedding journey."

"Oh, no! My husband will tell you—here he comes—that we have been married eight years. Haven't we George?"

"Yes—yes, certainly," he replied.

"Do you know Kate, I have some of that rice down my back yet."
