

The silver lining of the democratic cloud is very much in evidence these July days.

Well, well! Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, says he is hopeful that McKinley will carry New England. Hopeful is good.

Those republican editors who are blaming the tariff law for the closing of New England cotton mills must have forgotten, if they ever knew, that the cotton schedule of the present tariff law was drawn by Senator Aldrich, of R. I., upon suggestions made by those cotton mill owners. Such is the fact. The schedule was placed in the bill by the senate as a substitute for the schedule made by the house ways and means committee.

Everything indicates that Mark Hanna is beginning to realize the immensity of the contract he has taken. He is making overtures to some of his opponents in order to get their assistance.

In the last fight between Ex Senators Platt and Warner Miller, of New York, it was the latter who was carried home on a stretcher. This time, we trust that both of them will be knocked out.

Another political innovation! Horror among the faithful! Hanna actually insists upon naming the men who shall disburse the republican boodle in each state.

Gas Addicks is going to hold a republican convention of his own two days ahead of the other republican state convention of Delaware. With gas in control of one and gun powder of the other explosions may be expected.

McKinley has been officially notified of his nomination; he will be unofficially notified of his defeat on the morning of November 4th.

The unpaid hotel bills of the McKinley whoopers up, at St. Louis, are talking loud enough to be heard in the innermost sanctums of fat-fryingdom.

Mr. Hanna admits having spent $100,000 to nominate McKinley, and says that nearly two thirds of it was his own money. Does any sane man suppose that Hanna doesn't expect to make money by that investment, if he can land McKinley as a winner?

The man who thinks that the democratic party will not be in the running this year simply shuts his eyes to the signs of the times.

Some time ago there seemed to be no candidates for the democratic presidential nomination. Now the newspaper men at Chicago print a list of twenty-two. That tells the story of improved democratic prospects.

The republican candidate for vice president is so widely known that about half of the republican editors do not know how to spell his first name; but they will know when his checks commence floating around.

The report that Mr. Hobart had to get somebody to introduce him to McKinley is probably an exaggeration. Hanna attended to that before the nominations were made.
