The condition of the sheep industry in some parts of Utah, Idaho and Eastern Nevada may well cause alarm among the flock masters, says the Salt Lake Herald. The deadly disease known as osteosarcoma, or "big head," has made its appearance among the animals, and the result is that they are dying by hundreds, in some cases by thousands. Coming as it does, on the heels of a particularly hard winter, the outlook for the sheepmen is decidedly discouraging in the afflicted localities and it is hoped that the disease will not spread to other sections.

The Canyon City Eagle has received from John Herburger, of Skagway, Alaska, a copy of the Daily Alaskan, published in that city, which gives an account of the death of Chas. H.
