"All proceeds received will go toward supporting children who live in Grant and Harney counties who are subjected to neglect and abuse," she said.

She added CASA volunteers are trained to help children through the dependency court system.

Chinook fishery yields low catch for anglers

ODFW hopeful for longer salmon season next year

By Angel Carpenter Blue Mountain Eagle

JOHN DAY – Anglers had the opportunity to hook a Chinook in Grant County during the late May and early June salmon fishery, however, reports are the harvest was low.

The Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife approved the May 20 to June 7 opening of the Chinook fishery along a stretch along the mainstem John Day River near Kimberly.

ODFW's acting district fish biologist Brent Smith said he is only aware of three salmon caught.

"The river was in good shape for fishing flowing near 1,000 cfs at Service Creek about a week prior to the season, but when the rains came it rose to a high near 5,500 cfs," he said. "During high turbid flows it is nearly impossible to catch salmon."

He added the river dropped to around 2,000 for the last week of the season and a handful of anglers tried again.

"Overall, due to river conditions, there was very light angler pressure," he said. "I am hopeful for next year if salmon numbers are good, to open a longer season with a larger fishery area."
