

Kimberly

ELEVATION: 1,828 FEET • POPULATION: 100

Situated at the confluence of the John Day River and its North Fork at the intersection of Highways 19 and 402, the unincorporated town of Kimberly may be small in population, but is big on scenery and recreation. Local businesses offer amenities such as groceries and lodging, plus a post office, and visitors will find a collection of scattered residents united in community spirit. Several miles to the south are the John Day Fossil Beds National Monument and the historic James Cant Ranch, providing hiking trails and vista points throughout.

Outdoor enthusiasts, local and out-of-area, are attracted to the river access, as well as camping, fishing, fruit picking, picnicking, rock hounding, rafting and whatever else may make itself known during a day's adventure or a longer escape.

The region's temperate climate provides agriculturally rich growing opportunities - the area was named for a local pioneering family which started the first commercial orchard there in the 1930s.

DON'T MISS:

Thomas Orchards, where organic, home-grown fruit can be ordered ahead or picked by hand in a truly unique setting. Close by, the John Day River Trading Post is a riverside haven for travelers, offering groceries, gas and outdoor gear.
