Dayville running smoothly with new mayor

Slower pace appeals to Bogardus

Newly elected Dayville Mayor Peter Bogardus is happy to help his communi-

He works full-time as a teacher and track coach at Dayville School. He has taught math, world history, French, drafting and personal finance and has coached all events for the school's track team with the help of one other coach.

He moved to Dayville for his first full-time teaching job and, like many, found he preferred the slower pace to the busy city. "I went to a school with 2,000 kids, and to be in a building with six teachers total, K-12, it's different," Bogardus said. "I like it."

Before being elected mayor, he had served on the city

'The community is pretty small," he said. "Everybody needs to do something to chip

He looks forward to helping out with events like the city's Fourth of July celebration and the Bunny Hop 5K, for which Bogardus plans to don a bunny suit.

ried and has four children he loves playing with when not at city hall, the school or coaching track.

Unsurprisingly, he loves both reading and running, doing most of the latter during track season because he doesn't enjoy running alone.

He's drawn to fiction and fantasy when reading outside of school, especially titles such as Ender's Game and the 14-book Wheel of Time series by Robert Jordan.

Bogardus was elected in November and said, so far, things are running smoothly. The city recently completed a water line extension and repair projects as well as a wastewater treatment facility upgrade.

The future of the town looks good," Bogardus said. "The city doesn't seem to be shrinking.

The city has been fiscally responsible but has the lowest net tax collected in the county with just $7,869 expected during the 2016-17 fiscal year. Bogardus doesn't see any large projects approaching for the city but admits it will have to improve its revenue stream in the future.

He said Dayville is an attractive place to live but would need to grow to accommodate more people. "There's always more people who want to live here than there are places (to live)

Primozic looking forward to being back on council

By Rylan Boggs Blue Mountain Eagle

Re-elected City Councilman Frank Primozic is looking forward to serving the community by moving along key projects.

Primozic served one term as a city councilor, took a oneterm hiatus and is now beginning his second term as a city councilor. Primozic volunteers at the Dewitt Museum in Prairie City and wants to help with projects like the new sewer system and other water projects.

He was born in Wise River, Montana, and moved to Prairie City in 2004.

Primozic started volunteering at the Depot Museum in 2005 because his family was involved with the muse-

"The railroad opened up the John Day Valley to the 20th century," Primozic said.

Ranchers and farmers utilized the railroad to quickly and efficiently transport animals and crops.

He enjoys learning about the history of the railroad, which reminded him of his hometown of in Montana.

A roughly 100-person town in southwest Montana, Wise River had a similar railroad to that of the John Day Valley.

"Coming to Prairie City was kind of like coming to the big time for me," Primozic said. He has also lived in Denver and New Mexico.

The Eagle/Rylan Boggs Prairie City City Council member Frank Primozic

His one-term hiatus from serving on the city council was a result of a DUII accident right before elections.

He crashed into two Prairie City businesses in September of 2010.

"I'm sorry for what I did," Primozic said following the incident. "I plan on living my life differently."

Prairie City Mayor Jim Hamsher spoke positively about Primozic.

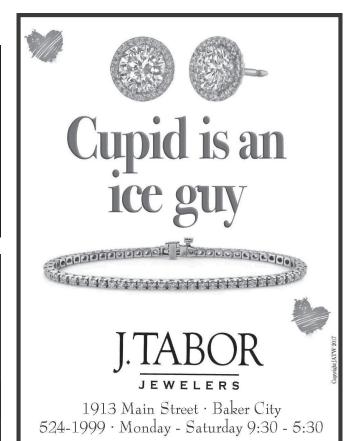

He was not worried Primozic's past would affect his service to the city and had complete faith in him.

"I think he's a very knowledgeable council member and very active in the council," Hamsher said. "Overall, he's a very good thinker."
