John Day Council OKs Revised Dog Ordinance

It will be expensive to allow dogs to run at large in John Day. At the John Day city council meeting Tuesday evening, the council adopted a revised dog ordinance, submitted by Wally Williams, police commissioner, calling for a maximum fine of $50.

The council also took a step in streamlining the city ordinances by repealing 20 outdated ordinances and approving a new ordinance covering the same area of the 20 older ordinances. A redemption fee of $10 instead of $5 will be charged for dogs picked up by the city police if claimed by the owner within one day. An extra charge of $1 a day will be levied for each additional day up to five days.

On the sixth day the dog will be destroyed. Anyone violating the provisions of the dog ordinance is subjected to a fine not less than $10 and not more than $50. It is possible for dog owners to be charged $65 for allowing their dog to run at large. A general ordinance defining offenses and providing penalties was approved by the council to replace 20 separate ordinances dealing with a variety of subjects from disorderly houses to minors in saloons.

From Feb. 16, 1967: THE STARS — They probably didn't realize it, but the cattle of the Clyde Holliday drive through John Day were something a little extra special Sunday morning as more than the usual number of photographers were on hand for pictures. Approximately 700 head of cattle were brought by 14 riders from the ranges in Bear Valley near Seneca to the Holliday ranch east of John Day. It took two days to complete the annual drive. The operation went off without any difficulty, said Holliday.

The new ordinance covers offense against public peace, safety and property. It also covers offenses involving morals and minors.

A review of the ordinances by the council resulted from an earlier study made by the League of Oregon Cities.

Other ordinances will be revised or repealed by the council.

In other business at the meeting, Byron Haberly and Harold Gooding appeared before the council concerning the insufficient water supply of the hospital road area.

The water situation at the higher elevations of the city is being studied by the planning committee of the city council.

No definite action was taken. Stanley Stout will audit the city books for the present year and will report to the council at the September meeting.

Wheeler Electronics

of The Dalles will maintain the city's radio equipment with maintenance work performed by Wheeler or a local authorized technician.

The council will appoint three citizens to the city planning committee to assist the council with city planning.
