First farmers market kicks off summer

Local vendors offer a variety of goods

By Rylan Boggs

The first John Day Farmers Market of the year featured clear skies, floating cotton and local wares.

Merchants at the farmers market sold everything from handmade jewelry to local produce Saturday morning.

One vendor, Janine Goodwin, sold jewelry made with a variety of materials including natural stones and Czech glass. She chose Czech glass because it's handmade and the workers are compensated adequately, she said.

Goodwin said she got her

Local and regional honey and beeswax was available from J5 Beekeeping. Beeswax has variety of uses including making candles and soap and is used in woodworking and fly tying, according to Shana Langely.

The stand was selling four different types of honey, all from a different region in the state. The flavor of the honey is affected by local pollen sources, giving each honey a distinct taste, Langely said.
