

Aging facilities plague the school district

By Richard Hanners
Blue Mountain Eagle

The gym floor at Grant Union Junior-Senior High School in John Day is buckling, but no immediate solution is at hand, Superintendent Curt Shelley told the Grant School District board Jan. 17.

Curt Shelley

"We can't sand it down. There's not enough wood left, and we'd hit nails," he said.

School staff had dealt with leaking steam pipes in the gym last fall, but the source of the moisture causing the southeast corner of the gym floor to warp turned out to be an ice machine.

Shelley said he's looked at the pros and cons of submitting a claim to the school district's insurer, which might deny the claim. He also felt sure the problem fell outside the scope of a seismic upgrade project for the gym next year — although he was concerned about the safety of the roll-away bleachers during an earthquake.

Light reflects off the buckled gym floor at Grant Union Junior-Senior High School Jan. 22. Moisture from plumbing for an ice machine caused the problem, according to Grant County School District Superintendent Curt Shelley.

Basketball players cross the damaged floor area during games, but so far the buckled floor hasn't posed a safety hazard, he said.

In other school board news: • An annual audit report was presented by Cara Wilber, from the Oster Professional Group office in Burns. Wilber noted that the school district's Public Employees Retirement System funds showed a significant net liability — growing from $1.8 million last year to $4.8 million this year.

Wilber said the big increase resulted from a rate increase in the actuarial tables, and the net liability is expected to increase again next year. It's a long-term financial problem that plagues school districts and cities across the state.

Shelley noted another long-term concern is the school district's aging buildings, with steam-heating and roof problems always looming.

"We're in good shape now, but I wish we had newer facilities," he said. "We're putting Band-Aids on our buildings."

Board Chairwoman Chris Cronin credited "good fiscal management over the years" for the school district's success.

• Shelley said it "raises my hackles" to read about Oregon's 48th-place ranking for graduation rates for the second year in a row. According to federal figures, 74.8 percent of students in the state's class of 2016 earned diplomas within four years of starting high school. That's 1 percent higher than for the class of 2015.

Shelley noted that Oregon has stricter graduation requirements than other states, and Grant County's graduation rates are higher than the rest of the state.

• Shelley told the board he wasn't sure how the school district would be impacted if the Measure 101 ballot measure fails. The ballot measure provides for certain assessments or taxes on health care insurance and the revenue of certain hospitals to provide funding for Medicaid expansion.

"I sure would like to see some stable funding in the state of Oregon," he said. "It would help ensure stable employment."

Lost motorist found on forest road

Stuck in the snow near Ukiah

Blue Mountain Eagle

A 52-year-old woman from Starr, Idaho, was found stuck in the snow on a Forest Service road near Ukiah after she was reported missing by family members.

According to the Oregon State Police and the Grant County Sheriff's Office, Ruby Pike left Portland Jan. 19 at 8:30 a.m. and was expected to arrive in Idaho by 10 p.m. Pike told a family member she planned to take a scenic route, and her last contact was with her husband at 4:13 p.m. Pike said she would call him when she reached Ontario, but she never did.

The sheriff's office was notified Pike was missing at about 8 a.m. the next day. A ping from her cellphone placed Pike around 10 miles south of Ukiah. An extensive search by Grant

Ruby Pike

County Search and Rescue and OSP troopers from John Day, Baker City, La Grande, Pendleton and Ontario began around noon.

Two Grant County deputies located Pike's white Toyota Tundra pickup truck stuck in snow on Forest Road 52 near milepost 35 at 7:58 p.m. Pike was found inside the truck and in good health. She was transported to Ukiah where she was checked by ambulance staff and reunited with her family.
