Poet featured at First Draft Writers' Series

Penelope Scambly Schott lives in Dufur, where she leads an annual poetry workshop

Go! staff

PENDLETON — Penelope Scambly Schott is the featured speaker at the First Draft Writers' Series, a monthly event at Pendleton Center for the Arts, 214 N. Main St.

The gathering is Thursday, July 21, 7 p.m. There are two options: attend in person at the art center, or join via Zoom (access the Zoom link at pendletonarts.org/first-draft).

ABOUT THE WRITER

Schott has published a novel and several books of poetry. She was awarded four New Jersey arts fellowships before moving to Oregon, where her verse biography "A is for Anne: Mistress Hutchinson Disturbs the Commonwealth" received an Oregon Book Award for Poetry.

Penelope Schott/Contributed photo

Poet Penelope Scambly Schott is the featured writer at the First Draft Writers' Series on July 21 at Pendleton Center for the Arts.

When asked about specific themes in her work, Schott said she's "always been guilty of over empathy."

FIRST DRAFT

Thursday, July 21

7 p.m.

Pendleton Center for the Arts

214 N. Main St.

Also on Zoom

pendletonarts.org

To illustrate, she shares the poem she wrote when she was about 6 and living in Manhattan. It was inspired by her view from her 13th story window at the six-story walk-up across the street.

Sad little skyscraper on a New York City street,

If only it could grow a few more feet Then it would be tall and could reach the sky and wouldn't be thought of as small at all.

She now lives in Dufur, a town of 635 south of The Dalles.

"I write about Dufur — about the land, people I know, lizards in my rock pile," she said.

She's led an annual poetry workshop in Dufur for several years, and she and her husband host the White Dog Poetry Salon in Portland.

Her recent books are "On Dufur Hill" (2020) and "Sophia and Mister Walter Whitman" (2021), co-written "with her equally enthusiastic and devoted dog." Releasing this year is "Waving Fly Swatters at Angels."

Her poetry, she said, is accessible to all

— even those who don't care for poetry.

"My poems are clear and understandable," she said. "You will know what I mean and you may either cry or grin. I am telling you the stories I would tell a friend and hoping that makes you and me friends — at least on the page and perhaps also in person."

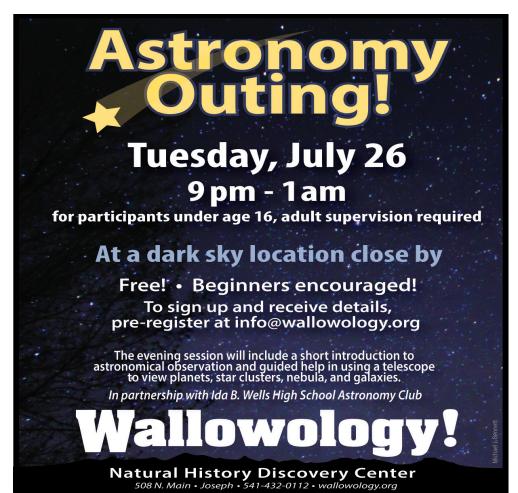

Her talk will be followed by a Q&A session that includes discussion on the craft of writing.

OPEN MIC

Those who would like to share an original piece can sign up for the open mic session that follows the Q&A. Up to 10 people can sign up for a time slot (3-5 minutes). For information, go to pendletonarts.org or call 541-278-9201.

SUPPORT

First Draft is made possible through the support of Oregon Humanities and the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Your Hometown Realtor Keisha Anderson Real Estate Agent 541.910.8827

www.bluesummitrealtygroup.com

