

Study: Help with housing issues sought

they will not be able to attract and retain the workforce necessary for their success if there is not an adequate supply of affordable housing.”

Major expansion of the Coast Guard, the Wauna paper mill, Lektro of other major employers could be derailed if the county can't prove there's enough housing.

Warrenton's commission unanimously approved joining the study after a brief discussion on whether the city would get its money's worth.

“We're far outpacing all the other entities in housing development, ... so what is the value we get out of this other than another report,” asked Mayor Henry Balensifer. “My concern is having another study down and having it just sit on a shelf.”

The countywide discussion was fruitful this year as opposed to some other years, Commissioner Pam Ackley said. “There was more discussion about making something happen. ... If we can spare the money, I think we should go with it.”

Added Commissioner Tom Dyer: “We do study after study and it's the same thing; we just call it something different.” But after reviewing the Tillamook study, he felt hopeful there may be answers, he said.

Commissioner Rick Newton said he was flummoxed with how to solve the housing shortage, so wanted to take a step toward finding a solution.

“I don't know what to do to provide people with housing,” Newton said. “I don't know what the answer is.”
