Finally, state gets some encouraging virus news

The Columbia Press and news services

News this week about the COVID-19 pandemic brought a bit of optimism to the state of Oregon, its struggling businesses and those who aren't receiving paychecks.

Infections with the virus are projected to remain level into May and stay within current hospital capacity if Oregonians continue social distancing, Oregon Health Authority officials said.

All 58 of the state's deaths have been among the elderly, and all had pre-existing health conditions. Clatsop County has had six positive cases, none of them have required hospitalization and three have recovered and are no longer under quarantine.

New projections from health researchers estimate that Oregon's "aggressive" social distancing measures have prevented 18,000 cases of COVID-19 and 500 hospitalizations. But restrictions must remain Oregon received 78 pallets of personal protective equipment April 10 from the U.S. Agency for International Development, replenishing the state's stockpile of N95 masks, face shields, gloves, masks, coveralls and other equipment.

The PPE has been kept in a foreign disaster warehouse in Dubai. The last time the stockpile was touched for a domestic emergency was after Hurricane Katrina in 2005.

This week, Oregon Army National Guard members picked up the supplies from the state distribution center in Wilsonville and distributed them to all 36 counties, nine tribal nations, and two tribal health

Graduation in time of COVID a sad introduction to adulthood

How will our seniors graduate from high school if the rest of the school vear has been cancelled? It's already a done deal, state leaders have decided.

While other grade levels continue with individualized "distance" learning, any senior who was in good standing when the governor shuttered the schools March 12 has been given amnesty for fourth quarter.

The news is small solace for Warrenton's class of 2020. There will be no prom, no spring sports, no final band or dance recital. no scholarship banquet, no graduation ceremony and no grad night.

"I'm sad for them," Warrenton High School Principal Rod Heyen said. "It's an anxious time for our seniors, for sure."

Senior Melia Kapua, a three-sport athlete, appreciates the love and support from the community, which has helped her cope with such a frustrating situation, she said.

City making post-pandemic party preparations

By CINDY YINGST The Columbia Press

The city is ready to party.

With cancellation of the Easter egg hunt and a downtown street festival, plus the possibility of no Fourth of July parade, commissioners feel something should be done for citizens, many of whom haven't left town or their homes for months.

"It's important we don't just cancel everything," Mayor Henry Balensifer said during Tuesday night's City Commission meeting.

He and other commissioners are working with Spruce Up Warrenton on a "Welcome Back to the Future

The group is raising donations for the party so the city's general fund doesn't take further beatings during the unstable economy.

"It's a communal sigh of relief," Balensifer said. "It's important to consider how do we move forward and how do we play our role in the new normal."

"My hope is that our state leadership will get on board" in opening up the economy, Commissioner Mark Baldwin said. "In Clatsop County, we've had six cases in five weeks that we know of. If it's looking like some of us dodged a bullet, it's because (local governments) took action early. ... I urge our state leadership to make decisions that are right for our citizens."
