liams had made an issue of Poe's wife's support of Black Lives Matter.

Opponent Berry accused him on Facebook of removing signs and cheating to win. He also blamed the county for interfering in the election by making his campfire wood sales an issue.

"They accused me of all kinds of misdeeds and bad stuff," Poe said. "Every time there was a challenge, whether with the signs or in the interviews, I dealt with it. I spent time with the write-ups and voter pamphlets. My wife was an English major, so she helped me a lot."

Poe's top issues are Warrenton's growth rate, infrastructure and finances, city government transparency, and citizen involvement.

He plans to listen a lot after taking his seat on the board and form good relationships before pushing any agenda items.

"Already I have good relationships with all those people," he said of the commissioners. "I'm going to try to gain their respect rather than push anybody's buttons the wrong way. I've been around some pretty rough people working on boats my whole life. I'm not intimidated, but I know how to keep my head down."

Poe will have to give up his seat on the Urban Renewal Advisory Board, but he'll continue as a commissioner to work with the Hammond Marina Task Force and the city's finance committee.

Clatsop County had an impressive 79 percent voter turnout. While most of the ballots had been counted Wednesday, county elections workers have until Nov. 12 to sort out ballots with missing or nonmatching signatures and other issues.

In other statewide races, State Treasurer Tobias Read and Attorney General Ellen Rosenblum, both Democrats, will hold on to their posts. Democrat Shemia Fagan will become the new Secretary of State.

A state measure to increase taxes on cigarettes, cigars, e-cigarettes and vaping devices was approved. Also approved were measures to use psilocybin for medical treatment, and marijuana taxes for addiction recovery programs.
