Hammond considers conference center proposal

FEBRUARY 2011

10 YEARS AGO

•The Warrenton-Hammond Historical Society, which has housed its archives for three years in space donated by the Deep Sea Fishermen's Benefit Fund at Lighthouse Park, has moved and is searching for a new location.

•City officials are outraged when state leaders offer a mere $100,000 to help the city build its new multi-million dollar wastewater treatment plant, which also will be used by Fort Stevens State Park and its 3 million annual visitors. A 1979 agreement put the state park's share at $600,000, the city says.

FEBRUARY 2001

20 YEARS AGO

•Warrenton city commissioners reject a proposal to pay an artist $10,000 to paint a mural on the side of Main Street Mini Storage at the four-way stop, saying city funds shouldn't be spent to benefit a single business.

•The City Commission honors residents who make Warrenton a better place to live. Diane Collier is named Citizen at Large; Main Street Market owners Mike and Tami Aho are chosen Business People of the Year; Clea Jacoby, Doris Thompson and Milton Lagerquist are named Senior Citizens of the Year for delivering Meals on Wheels; Yolanda Turner is Educator of the Year; and Melissa Iversen is Student of the Year.

FEBRUARY 1991

30 YEARS AGO

•The Hammond Common Council appoints a task force to evaluate a proposal from Northwest Conference Resorts to develop a hotel and conference center at Hammond Marina.

•The Deep Sea Fishermen's Benefit Fund has its third annual crab feed fundraiser this month. The organization has helped several families of fishermen since it organized in January 1989, including Cheryl Hitchman, who was flown by the group to Kodiak, Alaska, when her brother, Ray Campbell, was injured in a fishing accident there.

•City officials learn they must pay 25 percent of a $400,000 project to rebuild the city's dikes.

solve this longstanding issue of water infiltration," the port's executive director, Will Isom, told port commissioners Tuesday afternoon. "This step serves as proof to the city of Warrenton that we're following through... There's a lot of upside to this initial cost of getting this sewer issue resolved."

In addition to having Scouler as a new rent-paying tenant, a dozen more lots will be available for development.

The new sewer should be completed within two months.
