Fourth: Festivities found in several cities

The parade used to be organized by the city's Warrenton Business Association, but the City Commission disbanded the group about two years ago. The parade now is organized by Spruce Up Warrenton.

Spruce Up "has worked hard in a short amount of time to get this going," Moha said.

Entries range from children's groups, decorated wagons, the Astoria Clowns, pageant winners, classic cars, and local businesses.

"The weather looks nice, so I am expecting another great year," he said.

The parade begins at 3 p.m. and runs along South Main Avenue from the post office to Ninth Street. At Ninth, the parade heads west to its end at Warrenton Grade School.

To be in the parade, request an application at warrenton-fourthofjuly@gmail.com or find one under the "news and announcements" section on the city's website, ci.warrenton.or.us.

This year's parade theme is "Celebrate!"

ASTORIA

This is the place for a grand and larger-than-ever professional fireworks show.

The show is coordinated by the chamber of commerce and funded by 20 local businesses, including main sponsors Hyak Tongue Point, Van Dusen Beverages and Ohana Media Group.

Fireworks will be shot from a barge in the Columbia River near the maritime museum and downtown Astoria, which means just about anywhere on the river side of town will have a great view.

The show is expected to begin about 10 p.m. and will be accompanied by patriotic music on three FM radio stations, the Eagle 103.9, KCRX 102.3, and Clammy 99.7.

"Our goal is to celebrate our community with this long-standing and beloved tradition to help return to some semblance of normalcy while keeping the public safe," said Bob Dorn, co-owner of Hyak Tongue Point.

The display will be larger and higher than ever before to allow viewing from a larger area of town to avoid crowding on the Riverwalk.

GEARHART

A city-sponsored Independence Day Parade is planned for 11 a.m. Sunday.

If what you're looking for is a quaint hometown parade, this is the place.

The parade begins on North Marion Avenue, turns east on Pacific Way, and ends at the Gearhart Fire Station.

The event was cancelled last year due to the pandemic.

SEASIDE

Seaside Chamber of Commerce cancelled its 2021 fireworks show on the beach out of an abundance of caution. No other official events had been planned.

CANNON BEACH

The city plans to be the sole safe haven for those who want to celebrate the Fourth without the disruption of fireworks.

"Between the ocean, sea stacks, tidepools, and verdant coastal forest, Cannon Beach is home to a thriving but delicate ecological system," according to the city's website. "Specifically, the birds that dwell on and around the iconic Haystack Rock, sea life, and the renowned herds of resident elk at Ecola State Park are impacted by a firework display."

Last year, the city passed a law prohibiting fireworks within city limits and this year, the law was toughened to include potential fines up to $5,000 for violators.

For excitement, head instead to Haystack Rock, where the Great Puffin Watch is under way. Visitors can borrow a spotting scope and listen to interpretive volunteers talking about the birds.
