Warrenton man dies in Tillamook County crash

A motorcyclist from Warrenton was killed Tuesday when he struck an oncoming pickup on a rural road in Tillamook County.

Adam Taylor, 26, was headed south on Miami-Foley Road about 11 a.m. when he crossed into the northbound lane and collided with a Ford F550 driven by Jose Hernandez, 32, of Portland, according to Oregon State Police.

When troopers arrived, they found Taylor had died of injuries from the crash. Hernandez received minor injuries. A passenger in the truck, Rosalio Herrera Morelos, 54, of Vancouver, Wash., was uninjured.

Miami-Foley Road was closed for several hours while troopers investigated the crash. They believe speed and motorcycle inexperience contributed to the collision, according to OSP.

Tillamook County Sheriff's Office, Garibaldi Fire, Tillamook Ambulance, and Tillamook County Public Works assisted OSP.

Correction

The city of Warrenton raises about $60,000 per year through the business license fee. A story in last week's edition misstated the amount.

Knappa-Svensen-Burnside Rural Fire Protection's request for a levy to fund operations was finding favor with voters with 57 percent of residents there voting yes.

Not all votes have been counted as rules changed this year statewide, allowing any ballot mailed on election day to count regardless of when the county receives them.

Statewide, Tina Kotek was winning in the field of 15 Democrats running for governor with 56 percent of the vote. Tobias Read was trailing at 32 percent. On the Republican side, Christine Drazan was the leader in a field of 19 with 23 percent. Former state Sen. Betsy Johnson, running as an independent, will face the Democrat and Republican winners in the November election.
