Senior program says goodbye to head cook

BY EMMA EDWARDS

The Columbia Press

Lorna Anderson, the cook for Warrenton Senior Citizens Inc., has retired after 8 1/2 years.

She was 66 when she took on the role. She's handing the baton – or in this case a long wooden spoon – off to her replacement, Chris Grant, who starts his tenure at age 66.

His first official day in the kitchen will be Tuesday, June 7, when the senior meal program returns to Warrenton Community Center.

When asked what she plans to do in retirement, she said she plans to do nothing on Mondays (the meal program previously was held Mondays and Thursdays).

"I'll wake up when I want to and do whatever I feel like doing," Anderson said.

Her weeks have been planned for approximately 200 Mondays.

"No more," she said.

She does plan to continue babysitting Violet, age 6, and knows that they will have many adventures in the woods near her house and have more time to enjoy Violet's active imagination.

As for the rest of her time, she wants to do more gardening, photography, theater, and painting.
