Warrenton Police Department

The main route from Hammond to Warrenton was partially closed Monday morning when a semitrailer had a structural failure and dumped its load onto the highway, according to Warrenton Police Chief Matt Workman. Warrenton Police, Oregon Department of Transportation and Oregon State Police assisted in traffic control on Pacific Drive at Fleet Street in Hammond. The truck was hauling 50,000 pounds of fish byproducts from Point Adams Packing. A crane was used to lift the load back onto its wheels.

College tuition to increase

Clatsop Community College's Board of Education approved a tuition increase at its Tuesday night meeting.

The $7 per credit increase will begin winter term 2023 and is a way to combat the financial challenges facing colleges across the state and country.

CCC last raised tuition in 2019, when it went up by $3 per credit.

Over the past few years, the college chose to reduce department budgets rather than increase tuition. However, an increase was necessary in order to keep up with the rate of inflation and to maintain offerings and services, the board agreed.

Astoria waterfront brewery collapses

A portion of the Buoy Beer Co.'s building on the Columbia River waterfront collapsed Tuesday evening.

The restaurant and brewery are closed Tuesdays and Wednesdays, so no one was in the facility at the time of the collapse, which occurred about 6 p.m., according to the U.S. Coast Guard.

The company posted on Facebook and Instagram that everyone was safe and it thanked people and other breweries for reaching out.

The Astoria Riverwalk will be closed between Seventh and Eighth streets until the site is inspected to ensure the area is safe for pedestrians, Astoria Parks and Recreation Department reported.

A cause had not been determined Wednesday.

CCC to offer business studies program

A new educational study program in business was approved recently by the Clatsop Community College Board of Education.

The Associate of Science Transfer in Business is now available for students who study business at CCC and allows for easier transferability from the community college to a four-year college to pursue a bachelor's degree.

The college currently offers an associate's degree in business that doesn't provide such a clear path in mathematics courses for ease of transfer. With the new transfer degree, math statistics courses will be offered to complement the business content.

"I am excited to offer this new associate of science transfer degree in business, which gives students the opportunity to study a wider range of business classes locally before transferring on to a four-year business degree program," business instructor Carla Moha said.

Moha attended statewide meetings during the past year addressing transferability between community colleges and universities. Four-year university business department representatives were active participants in the planning of CCC's new program.
