OUR BRAVE BOYS.

The boys in blue are turning gray,
Thin grows our ranks and thinner;
We played death's game for many a day.
But death to-day is winner.

'Mid whistling shot and screaming shell When stoutest hearts must quiver, Facing the battery's belching hell, Some crossed death's silent river.

Some mangled, moaned with tortured Till death in mercy freed them; In prison pens some starved to death, With only foes to heed them.

And some "God's country" gained at last Died 'mid the dear home faces; Of limbs torn off by war's fierce blast Their empty sleeves are traces

We list no more the shricking shell, No more the bullets rattle; But comrades fall, while tolls the bell, As once they fell in battle.

Then close the ranks as years roll on, As life's dim sun grows colder; Face death to come as death that's gone With shoulder firm to shoulder What though above our wasting ranks

O'er heaven's blue vault is streaming. Though scant the muster roll below, Above 'tis growing longer; Though faint on earth our voices grow, In heaven they'll swell the stronger.
