Judge David S. Terry Killed.

Some months ago there was considerable newspaper notoriety given to the case of Sarah Althea Hill vs Ex-Senator Sharon's estate, in which Mrs. Hill claimed to be the wife of the deceased senator. As the estate was large the claim of the widow was fiercely contested by the heirs. The suit was finally terminated adversly to the claim of Mrs. Hill. The case was finally tried in the U. S. circuit court, presided over by Justice Stephen Fields. While the Judge was reading his decision the plaintiff Mrs. Hill, who pending litigation had married her attorney, Judge David S. Terry, became quite angry and interrupted the Judge's reading by denouncing him in very pointed language. The court ordered her to be taken from the court room for contempt. When the officer attempted to remove her she resisted. This caused her husband to take a hand, and drawing a dagger he made an effort to rescue his wife, but was soon disarmed, whereupon the court proceeded to sentence both Judge Terry and his wife to six months imprisonment for contempt of court. As the Judge had been on the supreme bench of California and always occupied a prominent place in state politics with a considerable following, he deemed his incarceration a grevious indignation. It was currently reported that he made frequent declarations evincing a determination to hold Judge Fields, in the language of the old style California "Chivs," personally responsible. The press throughout the state gave it out as almost certain that on the liberation of the Terrys a personal altercation would take place. The known desperate and violent temper of Terry made it quite probable that the meeting would terminate in blood, if not in death to one of the parties. The affair attracted so much attention that the attention of the U. S. marshal was called to it, by the U. S. district attorney. To protect Judge Fields, a special deputy marshal was detailed to guard him. Judge Fields having occasion to go from San Francisco to Los Angles to hold court there, and while en route the train stopped at Latham for breakfast. Judge Fields took a seat at a table in the dinning room and Deputy U. S. Marshal Nagle took a seat beside him. While breakfast was being eaten Judge Terry and his wife entered the dining room and took a seat at some distance from Judge Fields. In a short time Mrs. Terry went out, and in a few moments Judge Terry got up and walking behind Judge Fields struck him in the face. The deputy marshal told him to "hold on," but as he drew back to hit Fields a second blow, the marshal fired and sent a bullet through Terry's heart, his huge frame trembled and fell without word or moan. And thus fell the slayer of U. S. Senator David C. Broderick, something over a quarter of a century after the bloody tragedy that so stired this coast. The deputy marshal was arrested, but as it is claimed he had positive instructions to protect Judge Fields at all hazards, it is not probable much will be done with him.

Mrs. Terry soon returned from the cars carrying a satchel. This was taken from her and found to contain a pistol, but as her husband was shot before she returned her intended aid came too late. The general verdict of the people of California is that the shooting was justifiable, and there is a sense of relief in knowing that a bold, bad man has gone where he can do no more harm. But while this is so Judge Terry had many warm, personal friends and the end may not be yet.

Out to Sea on a Log

Oberton Harris a young mute, who lives near Sand Lake, Tillamook county, crossed the lake at low tide but not returning until dark and high tide came on, he attempted to cross the lake astride a log. The tide carried him out to sea he knows not how far, but for several hours he was buffeted by the waves in utter darkness. The turning tide finally brought him so near shore that he could touch bottom. He then abandoned the log and endeavored to wade ashore, but having been so long in the cold water his legs cramped and he fell. A billow from the sea cast him ashore and he finally reached home.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Mary Gilmore, nee Decker, was born in Waldo, Josephine county, July 25th, 1866, and went hence August 1st, 1889. Though brief her life, it was not without results, for it was filled with noble actions and cheering words for all. The circle of her friends were limited only by her acquaintances. At an early age she became almost a constant attendant and assistant in her father's store. Several months ago she was appointed post mistress at Waldo. Her official duties by enlarging her acquaintace, but extended the circle of her friends. The merry bells of last Christmas chimed at her wedding, and in August the dirges of her funeral swelled from 'neath the same old roof tree. That fell destroyer consumption entered the happy home, and amid the halcyon hours of early love sowed the seeds for the awful harvest. Long and patiently friends watched and hoped, now in cheer and then despair, as the deceptive disease bore her own in its cruel clutches to the grave. All that love could devise or wealth accomplish was done to avert the inevitable. Medical skill from the great cities was vainly invoked, neighboring physicians called without stint, but the patient sufferer gradually withered in the arms of death. In the home of her childhood she passed from the side of loved ones to the realm of light beyond the dark river. With faith in her eye, and love in her heart she breathed a fond goodnight to all. In compliance with her wishes she was laid to a peaceful rest in the Kirbyville cemetery.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Czar of Russia is now visiting Berlin, and the German Emperor is entertaining him in royal style.

Word reaches us from China that Lon Chew, China, was nearly all burned about a month ago, and that there is much suffering.

The Queen of England is suffering from sciattic rheumatism, and the Prince of Wales has trouble with one of his legs. Neither can sleep.

Heavy rains tell in Japan in July. At and around Anagi, about 600 houses were washed down, and about 20 persons drowned. At Hila, the same storm washed away 200 houses and drowned 90 people.

The most important news from France is the vote of the Senate by an almost unanimous vote condemning Boulanger, Count Dillon and M. Rocheforte as conspirators against the government, and embezzlers of public monies. Boulanger is now in London.

The present government of Canada proposes to abolish the custom of printing public documents in the French language, and also of doing away with separate Catholic schools. This has created quite a flurry among the Catholic French part of the population.

Word comes through the associated press that Henry M. Stanley and Emir Pasha are heard from. It is reported that they are slowly traveling with 8,000 natives loaded with ivory. But there is a rumor that Stanley, on being informed that the Arabs mere going to attack him, poured pitch and rosin over the ivory and burned the whole cargo. This is probably a silly report.

England, Germany, Italy and Russia, have notified the Porte of Turky that affairs must be mended in Crete. This has had the effect of giving the Cretans assurance of fair treatment, and the uprising we noticed last week has subsided, and quiet now reigns on that classic Isle. The trouble in Bulgaria and Servia, is also brought to a peaceful termination by the intervention of the powers. The great nations of Europe except Spain and France, seem to have entered into an alliance, having for its object the preservation of peace in Europe. This means that all Europe have united to prevent France from bursting forth in a war on Germany for revenge, and thus disturbe the whole world.

A couple of Kanackas who had received a military education in Italy at the expense of the Hawaiian government, in July last concocted a plan to seize by force, the body of the King, and place his sister on the throne of the Kammahamas. The King, owing to his friendship to the foreign residents, is not very popular with the native population, while his sister is thought to look with disfavor on the growing influence of the foreign element, is quite a favorite with the Kanakas. This state of affairs enabled these mad-caps to collect a force of about 150 men who, on July 30th, surprised the palace and took possession of it, but failed to secure the King. The foreign element rallied to the King's aid and after a few hours fusilading, the rebels were driven from the palace, and about fifty captured, and the war-cloud rolled away. The ring-leaders will probably be executed, and the land owned by foreign sugar planters and ruled over by a Kanacka King with a long name and short purse will continue to tread along in its usual drowsey course.

A Human Trust.

Chicago, July 31.—All the ballet girls in the west will soon be under the control of a wealthy English syndicate, which has headquarters and resident partners in Chicago. English capitalists are now looking at the theatrical business of America as well as the beer business, with the view of investing their sovereigns and controlling players and play houses. The intelligence that a New York manager had been offered $500,000 for a two-thirds interest in his houses was hardly received from the wires when a novel and extensive trust was discovered within the walls of Chicago itself. W. H. Morton, of the Columbia theater, is the agent of the British company. Associated with and interested with Mr. Morton in the venture are David Henderson, of the Chicago opera house, and Horace McVicker. It has become so difficult to secure a good ballet that such a scheme was absolutely necessary, to say nothing of the profits as a business enterprise. Mr. Morton has already secured three thousand girls for his trust. Some of them receive a regular salary, others half-pay, but all will be at Mr. Morton's beck and call.
