Sad but not Fatal Accident.

A lamentable occurrence happened on our streets recently which threatened seriously for a time but passed away without fatal or lasting dangerous result.

A popular salesman of our city was engaged in the innocent employment of sprinkling the street, and somehow unwittingly failed to exercise the proper discretion as to the direction of the stream, which played gaily upon the shirt bosom of an unoffending passer-by.

This new phase of Oregon weather was, strangely, not received with the best possible grace, and the saturated party evidently considered himself not well treated, and the salesman received a return shock in the way of salutations couched in fantastic language. It was a sad and awful scene and no remedy availed but time, which health all troubles.

The Ladies.
