Their Hundred Dollar Bill *********

O O HE'S gone at last, has he?" said of her pretty eyebrows. "I began to think he was somewhat gifted with im-"Dend at last," said I. "And what do you think, Jenny? He has left us a hun-"A hundred dollars!" echoed my wife, clasping her hands together. Charles—a hundred dollars!" Now all this may sound like a twopence-half-penny sort of affair to some of my readers, as I am very well aware. But as I am only a clerk on a salary of $900 a year—a hundred dollars drifting, as it were, out of the sky, seemed a very, neat little sum to me. Jenny and I were both young people, just beginning the world, with no par-ticular riches, except one apple-cheeked baby. I walked to and from business every day to save the 20-cents fares. We did our best to make both ends meet and a tight pull we found it.

Old Uncle Mozea Manson was mortally offended when his niece, Jenny Clif-ford, chose to marry me instead of a weazened, bespectacled old contempo-rary of his own. He had never spoken to her since, and we naturally entertained no very exalted hopes of any testamentary recollections on his part. And the $100 bill, therefore, possessed the charm of an agreeable surprise into "Charles," said Jenny, under breath,

"what shall we do with it?" "That is the very question," said L.

I hemitated a little here. Yes?" she responded, interroga-"Every fellow in the bank, except me, has a gold watch. I've been ashamed of this old silver concern more than And Seymour has a very nice secondhand one for sale that he will let me have for $90 if-" "And turn the $100 into a mere useless ornament!" cried Jenny, with a strong accent of disapprobation in her "Charley, that isn't a bit like "Well, then, what do you suggest?"

"I should so like to give a social party with it," said Jenny, coaxingly. "Only think how often we've been invited out since we were married, and never have had a chance to return any of the hos-pitalities of our friends. The musicians, the supper, and all, would come within the hundred dollars." "And you are absurd enough to wish to eat, and drink, and dance up a sum like that!" I cried. "No, no, Jennette, it is entirely out of the question." "A new velvet suit for the baby?"

auggested Jenny, pouting a little at the emphasis of my words. "How would it correspond with the rest of our surroundings?" I asked, not without an accent of bitterness. "You had a great deal better suggest a new for a few moments' conversation.

"The case is over," he began, "and winter suit and overcont for me. You the fine has been paid, and it's set- Census Shows Increase of 104.0 Per

"I had no idea you could be so selfish." "Selfish, indeed!" cried she. "I would like to know whether you have yet suggested snything which was not for your own special benefit and use!"

We were both silent. I don't suppose either one of us had felt so virilictive before, since our marriage. Clearly the $100 bill had worked no great benefit as | judge. "Why in the name of common
