 THE PROFESSOR'S FOOTBALL STORY

By Howard C. Warren. rom the New York Home Journal. Reprinted by

THE day of the great football game was approaching, and all Kensington was wrought up to fever pitch. On the campus, at the eating clubs, and in the campus, at the eating clubs, and in the town the talk was of but one thing. "How are the men to-day?" "Is Travers' leg any better?" "Will be be able to play?" "Any signs of over training?" "Do you know what tricks they are working up?" And so on—generally, be it observed, in the form of questions-for at this season of the year the "inside" is very secretive, and outside gossip varies in de-In the absence of definite knowl edge the suspense was terrific. A spir-it of nervous unrest pervaded the university, and serious work was well-nigh impossible. Moreover, this spirit affected not only the student body, but many faculty circles as well. Instructand younger professours were un der its sway, perhaps quite as much as any under-classmen.

Our always about football; lectures were prepared without the usual care and thought; and I fear we all spent much time in reading the athletic columns of the daily papers which ought rightly to have been devoted to original re-

"I don't know why it is, fellows, said Mitford, one day at dinner; "" don't care a rap about the smaller games; I don't take interest enough in them, even, to go down to the field when they are played in Kensington. But when it comes to the big ones, I get so nervous it breaks me all up: I can't work and can't sleep for think ing about them. The strain is fearful.

Prof. Mitford has a highly strung temperament, but we all felt that his particular words applied to our own Mitford had an added source of anxiety in connection with the game Guild, the great half-back, whom everyone down, was conditioned in Mitford's subject, and that condition must be removed before he could play in the championship game. Mitford had sent him notice after notice, with no effect, and he knew the students might attempt to take advantage of the facul tie's sympathy with their cause, and nd the condition in some way. get around the condition in some way. Now Mitford was a most conscientious man, and he had sworn by all that was holy that Guild must pass his exam-ination regularly if he were to play in the game; and yet his heart was with the team, and he knew besides the unpopularity he must expect to incur, if anything he did should contribute to the defeat of Kensington in the great event of the year.

"What about Guild, Mit?" we asked him one day at table. Mit looked up an expression of disgust, and what he said in reply is best represented by dashes and asteriaks. After that the subject was dropped, as far as we were concerned. But certain things became plainer as the days passed by and the date of the game It was evident that the Pembroke team were improving wonderfully, and would give our men a tremendous fight. And it was also evident that our men relied on Guild, practically, to win the game for them. was champion kicker, and runner, and tackler, all in one

"If Guild is knocked out during the not grieve," game we are lost," said some one at the Cloister once. We all agreed with the speaker in our inmost hearts, but as Mit was present we expressed no opinion, and the subject was deftly

"Has Guild passed off that condi-tion yet?" I ventured to ask Mit in the course of the day. ITCH IS TORTE

"Oh, go bury yourself," he an-"Oh, go bury yourself," he answered, and my fears were confirmed. With carte blanche from the faculty as to time, Guild had put off his examination till the last minute, and a failure now would be irremediable. That evening we were to have a party of guests to dinner—Mit's friends, they were—and the talk could

They were all anxious and nervous, but I thought detected a certain note of defiance their n I detected a certain note of defiance in the speaker's voice. I consulted with my chums, and at last we found the examination paper which Mit and cassing machinescenter. Four hard prepared for the occasion. The last progressed too far the certain and lary to be consulted to the consultation of the consulta ton, so they were allowed to take the paper to Guild's room.

While we were at dinner the bell rang at least a dozen times. The maid returned each time with the an-nouncement: "Some students to see Mr. Mitford." She had told them, of course, that Mr. Mitford was at dinner, and they had left. It was a different party each time, come to in-quire whether Guild had passed. And all this time Guild was in his room, presumably scribbling away for dear life. During the evening the bell-ring-ing kept up, and Mitford each time refused to see the callers. Our guests, who were out-of-town people, and, of course, deeply interested in the game, had been told of the circumstances, and plainly showed signs of curiosity

"Why, you simply must pass him Mr. Mitford," said the newitching Mrs Alton, the chaperon of the party, in her most enticing voice. "Just supposs we should lose the game on that

"Madam," said Mitford, putting or a dignity which is unusual with him at home, whatever he be in the classroo -"Madam, if he gets 50 per cent, I shall pass him;" and the fair visitor saw at nce that she had tried to carry her tyranny beyond its proper demain

At length our guests departed, and Mit went with them to escure them to the inn. Soon after they had gone, a student came around with Guild's pa per. He wanted to remain and hear the result, but we told him that Prof. Mitford was out and might not be back till late. He left in a state of obvious perturbation. As for us, words canno describe our anxiety. We talked as talked, and walked restlessly about the room and waited; but Mitford atli-failed to appear. At last we went up stairs. Though I seldom read in bed that night I thought I might profit by a few hours, which would not in any case be claimed by Morpheus. But what I read made no impression on n whatever. My thoughts were on the game, and Guild, and Mitford. Finally the outer door rattled, and Mitford's step was heard in the hall

"Mit," shouted Jim, "the paper's on the desk in your study!" "You mustn't come up till you've read it," chimed in George from his

"Right!" I added, involuntarily, and kicked myself immediately afterward for doing so.
A loud "hmm" was his only answer, as he stalked into his study. There was silence above and below for about half an hour. And I know now that Mit spent most of that tin with his eyes closed and his face in hihands, in agony. He had read the pa-per, and given liberal credit for all that was in it, and the figures summed up to a total of exactly 45. Should be wait his scruples and let the man through If he did not, what would be his future in Kensington? He saw the sudden end of his popularity—the game lost

In 30 seconds a snow-white lamb, wlonging to a flock that was being driven past the new schoolhouse of the Short Tract road the other day a Number, N. V., routed the entire school frightened Miss After Ray, the teach r, into bysteries, and forced the trus ters to hold a special session to appropriate money to repair the damage the lamb had done.

"It's the sweetest little lamb, just the kind that followed Mary to thool," Miss Ray said to her pupils as the lamb dashed into the room The pupils thought so, too, until Miss lay began to pet the lamb and show t toward the door. Then the liftle simal began racing around the honfroom. It collided with the stove nd knocked a leg from under it and fell in a heap. The coals scattered all over the floor, starting a fire

Miss Ray and the pupils broke for the door and escaped, followed by a blinding smuke. They carried snow and water and put out the fire. The lamb was extricated by John Bennett who was driving the flock. Miss Ray went home suffering from nervo prostration and school broke up for
