***************** Two Dinners at Pennington's \(\frac{1}{2}\) By Mrs. Moses P. Handy.

LREET WHITNEY knew that he could not marry. He was a sensifellow, on the whole, and realized that it would be sheer idiocy to ask a woman to share his hall bedroom.

Yet Albert was in love. Every Sunday in church he sat op-osite Miss Gadys Pennington, and thought of her far more than he did Miss Pennington's father was a rerother James were sole heirs.

Albert was a clerk in a wholesale hardware store and, by hard labor, earned ten dollars a week. Of this The moth sighed for the star, and Albert sighed for Miss Pennington.

The moth and the star were hardly further apart than Albert Whiting and Gladys Pennington. Albert had never spoken to her; she barely knew that he existed.

What, then, were Albert's feelings when, one day, after church, Mr. Amos Pennington pompously approached him and invited him to dine at his house on the following Sunday? He blushed like a girl, and stammered out an acceptance. Fortunately, Mr. Pennington did not wait for more. The invitation which meant so much for Albert to him meant only the discharge of a rather disagreeable duty which he admired himself for performing. He would have been thunderstruck at a refusal. Every year he obtained from the pastor of the congregation, of which he had long been senior deacon, a list of the young men who were punctual at church and summoned them to dinner. The good man liked to encourage piety and be-stowed invitations on these exemplary young men in precisely the same spir-it with which he awarded prize books

The following Sunday, when Albert entered the Pennington drawing-room, punctually at two, he was surprised to find already there, besides the host, his wife, his son and daughter, 15 black-coated individuals with all of whom he was pretty well acquainted. The assembly reminded him of a special meeting of the "Young Men s union."

It fell to Albert to escort Miss Pennington in to dinner. He, poor lad, was overwhelmed with the honor. He did not know that father Pennington, who exercised a strict supervision of his daughter's acquaintance, had chosen him as the most harmless and unassuming of the 16 young men.

Albert could think of absolutely no remark with which to open conversation. Miss Pennington, entirely at case, saw his blushes with more pity than wonder. She was accustomed to her father's duty dinner parties Mr. Whitney's shyness spoke in his favor, as a tribute of respect to her father. Mr. Pennington had brought his children up to strict observance of the fifth commandment. "It is rather warm for the time of year," quoth the young lady, break-Albert raised his eyes and assented. He would have done so had Miss Pennington said that it was cold. "What nice eyes he has," thought she. It was unusual for Gladya to notice a man's eyes. "It was frightfully hot at the lake last August," she said, aloud. "I think it could hardly have been warmer in town." "It wasn't bad in town, except in the middle of the day," replied Almurmured Miss Pennington, vaguely. "You hunt, don't you?"

"I fish a little," answered Albert. There was another silence. Miss Pennington turned to her other neighbor. Then Albert found courage to speak to his, a young man whom he knew quite well.

Uncle Morris had told him once that the farm would be his some day and some-times, when Albert felt despendent at his slow promotion, he pictured himself as living in the cabin, in old age, without even a nephew to visit toward the old man. Just as Albert was about to speak to Miss Pennington, once more, he heard her father's voice: "My dear young friends," and the rest of the dinner was devoted to remarks, partly instructive and partly catechetical, from that gentlemun.

Nevertheless Albert went home reoleing. He felt that he had made a great step. Thereafter, he was en-titled to raise his but respectfully to Miss Pennington on Sunday and upon on the street. Moreover, as in duty bound, he made his dinner call and acquitted himself with credit, his conversation being mostly with Mrs.

Great-upele Morris died suddenly that year, not long after Albert re-turned from his November vacation. It was a shock and a surprise to his nephew, for the old man was still vigorous and had seemed in even bettained leave of absence without salary and, drawing his little balance from the savings bank, hurried to Wisconsin to be present at the funertired carpet manufacturer, with a al. The attendance was larger than tidy fortune, to which Gladys and her he had expected; he was pleased to see how many friends and neighbors came to do honor to the duad. Chief among the assembly was Judge Steinberg, of Oshkosh, who greeted

> After the services were over the judge accompanied Albert back to the cabin and seated himself in Uncle Morris' chair, with the air of a host rather than that of a guest.

-was he?" gasped Albert Judge Steinberg smiled. Like most men, he enjoyed telling a good story. "I have known your uncle all his life; we were friends in youth, and I have always enjoyed his confidence. Years ago he had an experience which caused him to lose faith in all women, and most men, but which It is not for me to repeat. He bought this farm, which is larger than it appears, for much of the way spot. It was his delight that you should love him for himself alone. The annuity which your mother received, after your father's death, was paid by him on the express condition that she should not enlighten you in regard to his affairs. I have to congratulate you on the inheritance of a very considerable fortune, which is ex-cellently well invested. I shall be

"I am utterly inexperienced," he said, "and know nothing of business, except in the hardware trade. I could ask nothing better than to have such an agent as yourself. If it is to your advantage as well as mine that you should manage the property, I am only too glad."

The family were at breakfast when Mr. Pennington's eye fell on this paragraph in the Daily Conservative "Albert Whitney, clerk in the em-fast table. "I am sincerely rejoiced," he said. "It is providential that so large a fortune should come into the hands of a young man of such piety and rectitude.

Gladys looked up, pleased and intereated. She thought again what nice durk eyes Mr. Whitney had. "My dear," said her father to his wife, "we must invite him to dinner again and introduce him to some of our prominent people. As we did not ignore him in his obscurity, we can bet-ter afford to congratulate him on his prosperity.
