It is reported that Governor T. T. Geer has decided to become a candidate for United States Senator, and to that end will have his name placed on the tickets. A recent law provides that voters may express their choice for United States Senators in this manner, and aspirants for this office may place their names before the people for their approval. The elective power still remains wholly in the hands of the members of the legislature, but the voice of the people strongly expressed, would aid them very materially in making their selection. There is no doubt that Governor Geer will prove a strong candidate with the people, and the rival aspirants will find this factor in the case a serious vexation to them.

Southern Oregon will undoubtedly roll up a large majority for Hon. A. M. Crawford of Roseburg, the Republican nominee for Attorney-General of Oregon. He is a man who has a high standing in the legal profession; a man of great ability and unimpaired integrity. He has been one of Southern Oregon's leading lawyers for about 20 years, practicing largely in Coos county, and later at Roseburg. He is thoroughly qualified in every way for the important office for which he is a candidate, and if elected will be a most excellent officer. The fact that he is a Southern Oregon man gives him additional popularity and strength in this portion of the state.

Excellence should be appreciated and the people of this county will, in the coming election, have an opportunity of manifesting their appreciation of the excellent manner in which R. L. Bartlett has managed the affairs of the county clerk's office for the past four years. His nomination for a third term was virtually inevitable in view of the fact that it was a public demand, and the placing of any other man on the ticket for that office by the Republican party would have been a serious affront to popular sentiment. The office of county clerk is one which is removed from political partisanship. The county clerk has direct dealings in the course of a term with nearly every man in the county and it is no small part of Mr. Bartlett's official excellence that he meets all with unfailing courtesy and with obliging spirit and willingness to give interest and attention to all who may come. He manages the clerical duties of the office with faultless accuracy, and has well nigh made himself indispensable to Josephine county. It is doubtful if this county ever had another officer so thoroughly satisfactory as its present and future clerk.

A government must fit its people. To be in its best possible state of perfection, it must rest in the hands of that portion of its people who are capable of conducting it. Thus we find that ignorant or barbarous peoples are governed almost entirely by the few, while in civilized and enlightened nations, nearly all of the people participate more or less in the conduct of the government, and, if they are not allowed this privilege, there is dissatisfaction, strife and turmoil until they are permitted to share in the government of their country. In long-established monarchies like England and Germany, which wisely grant these privileges to their people when the time is ripe, the form of government may remain nominally the same; the ruler may continue to be called king or emperor and retain a measure of authority, though a limit is placed on his powers. The French government placed itself in the path of this irresistible law and perished in one of the bloodiest revolutions of history. Every vestige of government was swept away and had to be built up entirely anew. As a people progresses, so must its government. Measures and ideas that once were good become out of date. New ones are always in demand. As government has constantly developed and shifted in form since it was first instituted, it is folly to suppose that it has ceased to do so at the present time; that it has become stationary and will not change. A stationary condition is a thing unknown in nature. There must be progress or retrogression; growth or decay. Changes in governmental form or conduct are best made gradually, perhaps imperceptibly, like a natural growth. Sudden changes are violent and demoralizing. The nation is fortunate whose statesmen can detect the signs of the times and keep the machinery of government up to the time's demand. In this country, the tendency of the present time is toward a more democratic manner of government than we have yet had, a government more directly under the people's control. Our people are better educated than they have been in years past and with this education comes advanced capability and enlightenment, causing a demand for a larger measure of direct participation in the management of their affairs.

What do the Children Drink?
Don't give them tea or coffee. Have you tried the new food drink called Grain-O? It is delicious and nourishing and takes the place of coffee. The more Grain-O you give the children the more health you distribute through their systems. Grain-O is made of pure grains, and when properly prepared tastes like the choice grades of coffee, but costs about 1/4 as much. All grocers sell it. The 25c and 50c.

The school will have a vacation of two weeks, beginning May 5th, Miss Sackett, the teacher, going to Medford for a visit.
J. R. Hyde is battling with La Grippe. We hope this disease has about lost its grip here as nearly everybody has been visited by it.
Dick Vest had quite a wrestle with the La Grippe. As soon as he was well enough to go to work, Mrs. Vest was quite sick for a week.
The Hampton & Lewis mine will be able to run for six weeks longer, as the water supply is good, and from the way it is raining now, will last a good while longer.
Mr. Carville has been confined to the house for several days nursing some of Job's comforts. He could have been classed with the people of ancient times, "the stiff necked people."
Roy Judd and Hanks Newcomb came over from Williams creek for a visit with old friends. They had a social dance on Friday night in their honor. A very pleasant time was enjoyed by all.
The Burleigh drills are not running on account of the piston rod to the air compressor breaking. Mr. C. W. Thompson took the rod to Portland to have it mended and it will be several days before work can be resumed.
Mr. and Mrs. Howe and daughter, Mr. South and two daughters went to the Pass for a few days. The parents went to take the children to the show. That has become a very common excuse, especially where the parents' kinder's want to see the show too. There were others here who wanted to take somebody to the show.

GIBSON MURDER CASE.

Attracts Attention of Circuit Court This Week Jury Could not Agree

The most important case that has attracted the attention of the Josephine circuit court was that of the State of Oregon vs. Thos. Jefferson Gibson, slaying of B. S. Schonbacher, taken up by the court Monday morning. As is usual in such cases, standing room was at a premium in the court room during the procedure of the trial, many having come to the city from all parts of the county to hear the case tried. Several witnesses were summoned from a distance, among them being J. H. McHugh, and Dr. W. F. Cassiere, of Eugene, and Mike and Robt. Crow, of Douglas county.
But a short time was occupied Monday morning in selecting a jury, the following named persons being selected: H. S. Woodcock, Geo. P. Furman, Geo. Walton, G. R. McKimms, H. Messinger, A. D. Curtis, J. W. York, L. L. Jennings, C. F. Fielding, W. A. Leonard, W. J. Wallace, Jas. Kennedy. District Attorney Reames took the prosecution of the case in hand while the defense was upheld by R. H. G. Smith and H. A. Reed.

The first witness called was Thos. Hood, coroner. He testified to having acted in the capacity of his office as coroner in attending to the remains of Schonbacher and getting a jury's verdict in the case. He presented in his testimony, the single barreled muzzie loading shot gun that was found lying across the body of Schonbacher and also the load of powder and shot that was extracted from the gun. It was a light charge of powder with a small quantity of No. 8 bird shot. Mr. Van Dorn one of the two eye witnesses to the shooting gave his testimony, describing the manner in which the siffay appeared to him as he stood across the river at the corner of his house. He said that just started into the house with an arm load of wood when he heard the shot and looking across saw Gibson with his smoking rifle and also the prostrate form of Schonbacher.
Kisha Frankum, the ferryman, who lives on the Rogue five miles below the Schonbacher farm and who was well acquainted with both parties, testified to having heard the defendant (Gibson) make serious threats against the life of Schonbacher. These threats Frankum swore he heard from the mouth of Gibson at the famous "corner" in this city.

Doctors Van Dyke and Moore, were each called in turn and their testimony was similar in all respects. They found two bullet wounds in the body of Schonbacher. The first of these was in the head; the bullet having entered the center of the forehead, and passed directly through the brain. The entire top of the skull was torn off and the skull cavity nearly entirely emptied of its contents. The second bullet entered the fleshy part of the left arm and passing through entered the side and taking a downward course just missed the back wall of the lung and the heart passing along the spine. The bullet was extracted from the back where it had lodged. The last wound might not have necessarily been fatal, but the first could not do otherwise than cause instant death.

Mrs. Schonbacher was called, and the testimony of the aged lady was most pitiful as she told the story of the crime. She and her husband had lived on the farm by the Stimpkins ranch for four years past. Her husband and Gibson had quarreled several times prior to the shooting. Three or four weeks before, Gibson came over one early morning before she had arisen from bed and had a quarrel with Schonbacher just outside the house. The quarrel was about a calf of Gibson's that had been running in Schonbacher's field and he had set his dogs on it. Gibson told him that he did not want him to dog his cattle any more. Then again just a week before the shooting Gibson and Schonbacher had quarreled in the former's orchard over the matter of the division fence. Gibson threatened to put Schonbacher out of the orchard, but his wife, who was present, advised him not to do so. On the morning of the shooting Mrs. Schonbacher saw Gibson go across his field with a gun on his shoulder, whistling about five o'clock that evening. Schonbacher came into the house and told his wife that he believed he would take his gun and go out and shoot a squirrel. He went out with the weapon and a little later she saw Gibson meet him and cry out, "Put down that gun." He raised his rifle and fired and Schonbacher fell. She ran across the field to where her husband lay and found him dead. There was no one within a half mile and she did not know what to do. She first started toward the house as to what to do and then she had a short distance when she saw Van Dorn across the river. She turned and went past the body of her husband the second time toward the river. Just as she passed him, Gibson raised his rifle and fired the second shot. Assistance arrived on the scene and Mrs. Schonbacher was taken to the house.

Following the testimony of Mrs. Schonbacher a number of witnesses were called by the defense for the purpose of ascertaining the reputation of Gibson and Schonbacher bore for peace and quiet. All of them testified that the reputation of Gibson in this respect was good, while that of Schonbacher was bad. The latter was very talkative and made frequent threats, though none of them had ever known of him committing any crime, or of ever being arrested.

H. C. Perkins, the surveyor, was called and presented a chart, drawn according to his direction and from surveys made, showing the relative position of the Schonbacher and Gibson farms and the points of importance connected with the shooting.
Wm. Crow, Chris Taylor, Ed. Friday, Benj. Stimpkins and Horatio Stimpkins, neighbors of Schonbacher and Gibson, were all called and testified that the former bore a bad reputation in the community while that of the latter as a law abiding and peaceful citizen, was very good.
Mike and Robt. Crow, of western Douglas county, were called and testified to having known Schonbacher formerly in that section. They said his reputation there was bad.

W. L. Gibson, brother of the defendant was called and stated that he had warned his brother on the morning of the day that the shooting occurred to be on his guard, as Schonbacher had threatened his life. Certain Meles people had told him that such threats had been made.
John Riggs and Jas. Day of Mt. Vernon, and John Bradford, of Grants Pass, testified to the good character of Gibson. J. H. McHugh, a merchant of Eugene, was called and testified to having known Gibson many years for a number of years in Lane county. His reputation there was very good.
Dr. W. L. Cassiere, of Eugene, was called and said he had known Gibson as long as he had known anyone as they were boys together. Gibson, he said always bore a good reputation in Lane county.
Chas. Ladd, Chas. Gros and D. W. Mitchell, all of whom were acquainted with both parties were sworn that the reputation of Schonbacher was bad but that Gibson was a law abiding and peaceful citizen. None of them had ever known Schonbacher to do any serious crime, or of ever having been arrested.

The leading feature of the trial Tuesday morning was testimony of Thos. Jefferson Gibson, the defendant. Gibson appeared perfectly calm, and collected as he took the witness stand and began answering the questions of his attorney. Gibson is a small man, dark complexioned and with nothing about his features that would indicate a criminal. He stated that he was born near Eugene and it was there nearly all his life. He came to the Stimpkins farm last fall. He soon found that Schonbacher and he could not be peaceable neighbors. They had frequent quarrels. Schonbacher would set his dogs on Gibson's side, not only driving them off the farm, but sometimes completely out of the neighborhood. Gibson went to Schonbacher and asked him to stop and he said he would, but instead of doing this he kept on. The enmity grew but between them and as Schonbacher could not get in or out without crossing the Stimpkins' farm, things assumed such a condition as to keep a constant quarrel brewing. Gibson swore on the morning of the shooting to be on his guard, as Schonbacher had threatened his life. He had been out twice that morning with his rifle, after coyotes. He went to the river to get his boat, but it was tied on Schonbacher's land and he could not get it. He called across the river to Van Dorn to bring his boat to him, but no one could be aroused. He went back to his house and seeing the smoke arise from the Van Dorn home he started again for the river. As he did so he saw Schonbacher come out of his house with a gun in his hand. From the way in which they were walking they would meet at right angles. Gibson believed that he would have to kill Schonbacher or be killed. A small bill obscured Schonbacher from his view for a time. Gibson said he could have turned and fled at this time, but he was afraid that he would be pursued and shot down. When they came in view of one another they were about 125 yards apart. Gibson commanded Schonbacher to drop his gun, but the latter, instead of obeying, fired his gun to his shoulder and took aim. Before he could shoot, Gibson raised his rifle and fired. Schonbacher fell and Gibson walked on about 10 or 20 paces, and hearing grunts and seeing the body move fired another shot. He said he fired the second shot because he thought the first one did not kill him. Mrs. Schonbacher did not come out until after the second shot was fired. Gibson went over to the Crow ranch and gave himself up. He was brought into town and appeared before the district attorney making a full confession.

At the afternoon session, Tuesday, a number of witnesses were called by the prosecution to testify to the reputation of Schonbacher; these were, W. S. Wood, Chas. Nickel, John Lockhardt, A. H. Applegate, H. T. Kessler, A. H. Weiland, P. H. Harth and Jos. Griffith. These witnesses had either known Schonbacher in years past, or become acquainted with him more recently. All testified to the good reputation of the man. The first arguments in the case were begun about 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, Deputy District Attorney Reames making the opening plea for the prosecution.
Following this came the opening arguments for the defense by Col. Reed. The speaker stated that there was but one question in the case of importance for the jury to decide and that was whether or not Gibson shot in self defense. The arguments of Col. Reed in reviewing the testimony were along this line.
Attorney R. G. Smith followed with the completing arguments for the defense. Before beginning his plea he begged that the court instruct the jury as to what is meant and defined by law as a dangerous weapon and also what rights a man is allowed in acting in self defense. The plea of Attorney Smith for his client was most eloquent and the entire testimony and circumstances in the case were reviewed at length.

District Attorney Reames made the closing arguments for the prosecution with a long address before the jury, which was frequently interrupted by objections from the council for defense.
At the close of Attorney Reames' arguments the court adjourned till 7:30, at which time it was convened and over an hour continued in the last session of the jury by the judge.
It is believed the weary jury retired to deliberate. Many of the spectators waited an hour or more for their return. Then they dispersed and only a few stragglers remained. Still the jury did not return. The night passed by and still no verdict. At noon Wednesday they still could not agree a new trial seems a necessity.

Leland Sitings.

Pack horses are now in good demand as a great many men are going into the hills prospecting.
Melvin Chip is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Chapin. He reports quiet times at Merlin.
Tom Clark, our village blacksmith, got all the work he can do. Tom understands his business.
John Mackin is busy fitting wood from Brimstone to Leland. He finds it much cheaper than hauling by wagon.
The majority of miners have plenty of water at present, but if this dry weather continues the water supply will soon be cut off.
Lewis and Rube Jones are working on their ledge in the Mt. Reuben district. It has developed into a large, well defined vein.
What has become of "Dick", poor boy, we are afraid that widow he met at Leland got away with him. Please report Dick.
We have a man in our midst who has an appetite like a— He uses a doctor so he only eats once in three days, he says that is the way to economize.
Fred Milton is raising poultry and has quite a good selection of birds. He can furnish fat roosters on short notice. Fred has an incubator and keeps it busy.
A good many Lelanders took in the circus at Grants Pass last week. We are wondering why the show did not stop at Leland, but we think our city date charged too much for the use of the city park.
Times are lively at Kinneyville. Wood hauling is being raised, judging from the looks of the piling ground. The railroad company does not take it away as fast as it is being hauled.
We are having good weather for gardening and people are busy planting. Fruit trees are loaded with bloom and the prospects for a big peach crop are good. We have had no frosts since the trees began blooming. Alfalfa is making a good growth and the first crop will be ready to cut as soon as the farmers are prepared to handle it.
We are looking for some of the immigrants from the East to come to our town to locate. So far but a few have come. The business men of our town should take more interest in this matter and secure our share of the immigration. We have plenty of good rail road land, also some very desirable tracts of land for sale which could be converted into good farms with the aid of the six and match. We have a chance here where stock can as a rule get outgrown living.

Actual Tests Prove the Racycle The World's Best Bicycle

No guess work or theory. Our Crank Hanger Does it. Does what? Makes it Run Easy. The Only Wheel which saves the Rider's Strength. Larger Sprockets and Smaller Chains. The Best of Experiment and Reason. In the following tests, one end of chain was tied to the front sprocket, the other allowed to hang down over the rear sprocket. On the pedal end of the crank (forming a lever) was suspended a 150-pound weight. The various amounts attached to the rear end of the chains show the exact number of pounds required to balance, clearly demonstrating the amount of strain on each chain.

A Standard High-Grade BICYCLE
With 24 Tooth Front Sprocket and an 8 Tooth Rear, Making a 3:1 GEAR.
Note the enormous increase in the strain on the chain with smaller sprockets and a 9 inch lower gear than those of the Racycle. Unless it has a Racycle Hanger, a suit of clothes, and a watch ought to go with such a wheel.

The Racycle Roadster
With 30 Tooth Front Sprocket and a 9 Tooth Rear, Making a 3:3 GEAR.
The Best All Around Roadster Ever Built.
Less Pressure on Bearings than on any Bicycle. Has from 25 to 75 less strain on its chain than any other Bicycle of the same gear except the Racycle Pacemaker.

With less strain on the chain there must be a corresponding less compression on the rear fork, hubs and rim. A 3:1 chain has been used on the Racycle for years, and has proved a great success. Many manufacturers have experienced trouble with their sprockets and chains. WHY? Because smaller sprockets and lower gears mean more strain on the chain so much that it must either break or stretch. The Racycle chain is made of steel and is so strong that it will stretch only a few hundredths of an inch. HERE IT IS! The Racycle chain is made of steel and is so strong that it will stretch only a few hundredths of an inch. HERE IT IS! The Racycle chain is made of steel and is so strong that it will stretch only a few hundredths of an inch. HERE IT IS!

An Ounce of Demonstration is Worth Pounds of Argument. Racycles Ride Further and Faster with Less Work.
