They should become acquainted with their district as regards section, township and range, so that when they see the description of a piece of land they may recognize its location at once. There is no likelihood that the timber locators will be too careful for the mineral interests, and those interested in the mineral welfare of this county should continue to make every honorable effort to protect the mineral industry.

Tracy is achieving a reputation as being the most wonderful criminal in firm of Allen & Lewis, Portland, passhistory. Chris Evans and the James outfit are novices in comparison with him. He continues to clude his pursners with apparent case and the story of his escapades would put a dime novel to shame. Tracy combines human intelligence with brute insensibility. He cares no more for the life of a human being than for that of any four footed beast. The body of Merrill, his partner, has been found, proving the truth of Tracy's assertion of killing him. Tracy killed his partner because he made too much noise in the brush and because the newspapers were giving the two equal credit in their daring escapes. Many of Tracy's acts show him to be greedy of notoriety and proud of his murderous record.
