Backed up by over a third of a century of remarkable and uniform cures, a record such as no other remedy for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women ever attained, the proprietors of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now feel fully warranted in offering to pay $500 in legal money of the United States, for any case of Leucorrhea, Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of Womb which they cannot cure. All they ask is a fair and reasonable trial of their means of cure.

"I used four bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery,'" writes Mrs. Elmer D. Shearer, of Mount Hope, Lancaster Co., Pa., "and can say that I am cured of that dreaded disease, uterine trouble. Am in better health than ever before. Every one who knows me is surprised to see me look so well. In June I was so poor in health that at times I could not walk. To-day I am well. I tell everybody that Dr. Pierce's medicine cured me."

OREGON'S BIG TIMBER

Attracting Much Attention at the St. Louis Exposition.

Oregon's big log, 10 feet in diameter and 300 feet long, containing 10,000 feet of lumber, is the main attraction in the state forestry exhibit at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. This section of a 250-foot fir tree looks pretty big to eastern eyes, and never fails to elicit much comment on the lumber industry of the west.

This log is from Blind Slough, Clatsop County, and was one of seven cut from an Oregon fir tree that stood 200 feet to the first limb. The whole tree scaled in the neighborhood of 40,000 feet, and the section now on display contains at least a quarter of it. It was brought to St. Louis on a steel flat car, and as it weighed 28 tons, it proved to be about all the Exposition transfer companies could handle. It was finally unloaded and placed in position in the outside exhibit of the forestry department.

Another attention attractor is a single stick of fir, 42 feet long and 48 inches square, which is about the biggest piece of wood on the ground. It is also in the outside exhibit, along with the fir log, and the two go a great way toward showing what the timber industry of the state has to fall back on. Beside the two large pieces of fir, the Simpson Lumber Company of North Bend, Oregon, has on exhibit two white cedar blocks, one five and the other six feet in diameter.

One feature of the Oregon Building itself never fails to receive praise from lumber men, is the absence of knots in Oregon lumber. The interior of the building is sealed with fir, pine, spruce and larch, all of which was donated by Oregon mill companies. Each room is fitted out in one variety, and the whole presents a very pleasing appearance. The planking is long, and clear, very different from the lumber sold in Missouri for A No. 1. The best quality of lumber to be got in St. Louis is in short lengths, and full of knots and twisted grain. Added to this the price of about $35 per thousand makes lumber a rather unpopular material to the person who has to pay for it.

Many inquiries on the amount of timber left in the state are fired at the heads of the superintendents by interested visitors, and when they are told that Oregon has one sixth of all the timber in the United States, or 325,000,000,000 feet B. M. and that there are 457 saw mills in the state, all working full time, they stare in open mouthed amazement. Most easterners have absolutely no conception of the lumber industry of the western states, though the Louisiana Purchase Exposition will go a long way toward dispelling their illusions.

The Federated Trades Council, of Portland, (composed of 56 Labor Unions with a total membership of more than 10,000) in connection with the Lewis and Clarke Fraternal Building Association, (composed of 34 of the Fraternal Orders represented in that city) are to give a Mardi Gras and Festival in the city of Portland, commencing on the morning of June 28th and continuing until the evening of July 9th.

This Carnival will be one of the most extensive and elaborate ever held in the Northwest. The General Committee in charge has leased the entire Multnomah club grounds, and attractions have been procured from different parts of the United States. The promise is given to all who attend, that they will witness one of the best shows of this kind they ever had the opportunity of looking upon west of the Rocky Mountains.

A NEWSPAPER WOMAN.

BY LAURA G. LEVY.

It was the dull season on the Morning Star. Brown, the city editor, was hungrily seeking "spreads" and none were in sight. He brightened up when Grayson came into the city room. But the "crack" reporter had an ashen color quite different from his usual ruddy hue, the result of the active life he led.

He went up to the editor's desk and made his report. Evidently his news was "hot stuff," for the editor looked up eagerly, asking: "Do you know the whole story? Did anyone else get it? Have we her picture?"

The crack reporter hesitated in a strange manner and said: "Look here, Brown, can't we let the story slide? No one else has it. Don't print her picture."

Brown glanced sharply at his side with those keen eyes of his. "Nonsense!" he said; "make a good story of it."

Grayson was an unconscionable time writing the story, and, in the end, he made barely a quarter of a column out of it. When it was finished he waited until he saw the editor getting into his overcoat to go home.

Brown and he were old friends. Together they had struggled for a foothold in the newspaper world, on the staff of the Moon. And together they had left it after Grayson's famous fight over his bill. He had been ordered to Johnstown at the time of the floods, and of course had gone at a moment's notice to brave dangers in pursuit of news for his paper. Nights in the open air, [illegible] rolled up for a pillow, on [illegible] or in freight cars, once in [illegible] in the branches of a tree, he had spoiled the suit which was new the day of his departure. When he [illegible] his bill for that eventful assignment, he added the cost of the suit. The paper in whose service he had [illegible], disallowed, whose graphic [illegible] his work, cut out the [illegible] his friend left.

[illegible] he waited for Brown with [illegible]. The two men walked up [illegible] to their favorite restaurant [illegible] in silence.

"You didn't remember Miss Taylor when I mentioned her just now, did you, Frank?" Grayson said, at length.

"[illegible] I lost track of her after we left the Moon. She was a pleasant, bookish little thing, wasn't she?"

"She was a right nice girl, minding her own business, neither slangy nor [illegible]. I remember how she blushed [illegible] when the boys [illegible] her."

"[illegible]" put in Brown, "she was as [illegible] as possible what people think newspaper women are. And so she's dead? Well, well!"

"[illegible], let me tell you the story. Then [illegible] you'll not read it [illegible]"

"Go on."

"I met her one day when old Gibson [illegible] a personal earmarked. I wrote the notice, and she copied it [illegible] in a feminine handwriting. We struck up quite a friendship over that letter, and I fell into the habit of [illegible] a word to her about [illegible] Gradually we fell [illegible] to other things, and that's how I got to know what a thoroughly nice little woman she was. You know that she didn't take any regular assignments, didn't you? She wrote [illegible] in the City, 'Nineteenth Century Love Stories.'"

"No, I didn't know that. Well, by [illegible] I used to think [illegible]"

"[illegible] better than Lowry's work [illegible] that's how we got to know one another so well, and when we left the Moon, I never quite lost track of her. The Moon stopped its fiction department, and she set up as special writer. After awhile she was hurt in that accident on the cable. You remember? I told you when it happened. She was in a hospital for two months, and sick on her savings for another two. By that time, she had dropped out of the minds of Sunday editors, or her friends were gone. At all events, she went from paper to paper without being able to sell her stuff. She couldn't do regular work because bad weather set her shoulder to aching so that she was almost laid up. I saw her once or twice and asked how she was getting along. 'Pretty well,' she answered, with her brave little smile; 'at least, I hope some of my stories will be accepted this time.'

"I was sent to the strikes in Chicago then, and I didn't see her again until today. The address Dr. Burnside gave was a lodging-house on the east side—decent enough. The woman who ran it said that Kate had come to her three days before. She brought a Gladstone bag, and said that if the place suited her she would send for her trunk. Kate had known the woman who ran the house, a Mrs. Thompson—had given her a write-up of some kind. So she was glad to take the girl in. Kate told her she had a big story on hand for one of the magazines, and did not want to be disturbed. She'd take care of her own room.

"Mrs. Thompson, however, was in the habit of gossiping with her lodgers, and somewhat resented being shut out in this unceremonious fashion. She kept a sort of surveillance over Miss Taylor through the keyhole; and there she was, sure enough, seated at the table, engaged apparently in writing. For two whole days this kept up. There was no sound or almost none from the occupied room, nor did its occupant leave it. At last Mrs. Thompson could stand it no longer. Even her friendliness for the girl could not keep her from trying to have a talk with her.

"She went to the door and knocked again and again without getting an answer. Then a dreadful idea came to her. Perhaps her kindness had been abused, and Miss Taylor had gone off without paying her. Of course, she went straight down to communicate this to her husband, an idle sort of a fellow, whom she supported, and in consequence looked up to fondly. They came up together prepared to force the door if need be. The thought that if their guest was gone she'd hardly be likely to lock it after her was too simple to occur to them.

"But, strange to say, the door opened to their touch and there was the girl seated as she had been the day before. She was not writing. Her elbows were on the table, her head resting on her hands. She seemed asleep, for she did not notice Thompson's cough. But he was determined, warned by his scare, to be paid for the use of the room. He coughed again louder, then spoke her name, then approached her. The setting sun shone full on her face. She was dead.

"On the table there were a few sheets of manuscript—a little story just begun. The Gladstone bag held only some worn-out underclothes and a photograph. There was no sign of anything to eat in the room."

Brown's face rivaled Grayson's. "How had she died?" he asked, at length.

Grayson hesitated; then, slowly: "Of starvation. Her 'story' was simply an account of her suffering. Here, take it." He handed his friend a folded sheet and the latter read: "When first I met him I was well and working hard. But sickness came to put an end to all my hopes. I have been unable to get work. I have not had sufficient food or clothes or warmth in months. Would he be sorry if he knew? I have begged from passersby. I have gone to charitable institutions, which 'investigated' my 'case,' but could not help me, there were 'so many appeals.' No doubt the end is in sight now. I wish, I wish he knew!"

The editor looked at Grayson, whose eyes were fastened on the ground.

"Where is the body?" he asked.

"You know Burnside gave us the tip. He's just been appointed to the morgue." Grayson spoke sharply and held out his hand for the "story."

Brown mused a space longer. Then he said: "One question more, Bob. Whose was the photograph?"

"Mine."—Illustrated American.

"Wine of Cardui is indeed a blessing to tired women. Having suffered for seven years with weakness and bearing-down pains, and having tried several doctors and different remedies with no success, your Wine of Cardui was the only thing which helped me, and eventually cured me. It seemed to build up the weak parts, strengthen the system and correct irregularities."

By "tired women" Mrs. Adams means nervous women who have disordered menses, falling of the womb, ovarian troubles or any of these ailments that women have. You can cure yourself at home with this great women's remedy, Wine of Cardui. Wine of Cardui has cured thousands of cases which doctors have failed to benefit. Why not begin to get well today? BRIGHT'S DISEASE

The largest sum ever paid for a prescription, changed hands in San Francisco, Aug. 30, 1901. The transfer involved in coin and stock $112,500.00 and was paid by a party of business men for a specific for Bright's Disease and Diabetes, hitherto incurable diseases.

They commenced the serious investigation of the specific Nov. 15, 1900. They interviewed scores of the cured and tried it out on its merits by putting over three dozen cases on the treatment and watching them. They also got physicians to name chronic, incurable cases, and administered it with the physicians for judges. Up to Aug. 25, 87 per cent of the test cases were either well or progressing favorably.

There being but thirteen per cent of failures, the parties were satisfied and closed the transaction. The proceedings of the investigating committee and the clinical reports of the test cases were published and will be mailed free on application. Address JOHN J.
