

as any one else. There was a pause, while Constance turned over in her mind. It struck her as singular that Oakley's father should be one of the hands. Perhaps she credited him with a sensitiveness which he was entirely innocent. She pressed her chin in her hands and looked out into the dusty street. It infinitely pathetic to think of the poor little man and his work? "Do you know, I have cried? And his wife's faith, sublime, even if it is mistaken." "It is to be done for people like whose lives are quite unimportant," were joined by the doctor, who caught a part of what Constance said and divined the rest. "You see only the pathos. Joyce is well off here as he would be elsewhere else, and perhaps a little more." He makes a decent living with his "studies." As he spoke he crossed the porch and stood at her side, with his hand resting affectionately on her shoulder. "Does there's a larger justice in the world than we conceive," said Constance. "I don't know, to go on blindly doing something that is really very painful and never to know?" "You turned to Oakley." "I am afraid I rather agree with my father. He seems happy enough, and he is doing work for which there is a demand." "Would you be content to live here with no greater opportunity than he has?" "Oakley laughed and shook his head. "No, but that's not the same. I'll be the Huckleberry up and make it then and go in for something like that." "If you can't make it pay?" "I won't bother with it, then." "What if you had to remain?" "Oakley gave her an incredulous look. "That couldn't be possible. I have seen all sorts of things but stick in my mind to be undesirable berths. Of course business is not at all the thing. But isn't it? Look at Mr. Ryder. He says that he is buried here in the woods, with no hope of ever getting back into the world, and I am sure that, as a journalist, he is certainly a success, like anything else." "Oakley made no response to this. He proposed to ride with her; but, the same, he doubted his ability. "The doctor's frightfully lazy," remarked Constance. "He prefers to settle down in an effortless sort of an existence rather than make a struggle."

"Don't you think Mr. Ryder extremely clever, Mr. Oakley?" "I know him so slightly. Miss Emory, or do you doubt he is?" Mrs. Emory appeared in the doorway, placid and smiling. "Constance, you and Mr. Oakley come on in; dinner's ready." When Dan went home that night he told himself savagely that he would never go to the Emorys again. The experience had been most unsatisfactory. In spite of Constance's evident disposition toward tolerance where he was concerned, she exasperated him. Her unconscious condescension was a bitter memory of which he could not rid himself. Certainly women must be petty, small souled creatures if she was at all representative of her sex. Yet in spite of his determination to avoid Constance, even at the risk of seeming rude, he found it required greater strength of will than he possessed to keep away from the Emorys. He realized in the course of the next few weeks that a new stage in his development had been reached. Inspired by what he felt was a false but beautiful confidence in himself he called often, and as time wore on the frequency of these calls steadily increased. All this while he thought about Miss Emory a great deal and was sorry for her or admired her, according to his mood. In Constance's attitude toward him there was a certain fickleness that he resented. Sometimes she was friendly and companionable, and then again she seemed to revive all her lingering prejudices and was utterly indifferent to him, and her indifference was the most complete thing of its kind he had ever encountered. Naturally Dan and Ryder met very frequently, and when they met they clashed. It was not especially pleasant, of course, but Ryder was persistent and Oakley was dogged. Once he started in pursuit of an object he never gave up or owned that he was beaten. In some form he had accomplished everything he set out to do, and if the results had not always been just what he had anticipated he had at least had the satisfaction of bringing circumstances under his control. He endured the editor's sarcasms and occasionally retaliated with a vengeance so heavy as to leave Griff quivering with the smart of it. Miss Emory found it difficult to maintain the peace between them, but she admired Dan's mode of warfare; it was so conclusive, and he showed such grim strength in his ability to look out for himself. But Dan felt that he must suffer by any comparison with the editor. He had no genius for trifles, but rather a ponderous capacity. He had worked hard, with the single determination to win success. He had the practical man's contempt, born of his satisfied ignorance, for all useless things, and to his mind the useless things were those whose value it was impossible to reckon in dollars and cents. He had been well content with himself, and now he felt that somehow he had lost his bearings. Why was it he had not known before that the mere strenuous climb, the mere earning of a salary, was not all of life? He even felt a sneaking envy of Ryder of which he was heartily ashamed. Men fall in love differently. Some resist and hang back from the inevitable, not being sure of themselves, and some go headlong, never having any doubts. With characteristic singleness of purpose Dan went headlong, but of course he did not know what the trouble was until long after the facts in the case were patent to every one, and Antioch had lost interest in its speculations as to whether the doctor's daughter would take the editor or the general manager, for, as Mrs. Poppleton, the Emorys' nearest neighbor, sagely observed, she was "having her pick." To Oakley Miss Emory seemed to accumulate dignity and reserve in the exact proportion that he lost them, but he was determined she should like him if she never did more than that. She was just the least bit afraid of him. She knew he was not deficient in a proper pride and that he possessed plenty of self respect, but for all that he was not very dexterous. It amused her to lead him out and then to draw back and leave him to flounder out of some untenable position she had beguiled him into assuming. She displayed undeniable skill in doing good work here. There's nothing like being on the ground yourself." It was characteristic of him that he should ignore the work Ryder had done in his behalf. "You are an inspiration, Sam. The people know their leader," said the editor genially, but with a touch of sarcasm that was lost on Kenyon, who took himself quite seriously. (To be Continued.)

n't Put Off for tomorrow what you can do today. If you put off buying a bottle of Ballard's Snow Liniment, when that pain comes you won't have any, buy a bottle today. A positive cure for Rheumatism, Burns, Cuts, Sprains, Contracted Muscles, etc. T. S. Graham, Arvizo Grove, Ark., writes: "I wish to thank you for the good results which I had from Snow Liniment. It positively cured me of Rheumatism after others had failed. For sale by National Drug Co., and by Demaray."

EFFECT OF THE FOOD LAW
Driving Many Worthless Catarrh Medicines Out of Existence.
Many worthless remedies that have been advertised for the cure of catarrh have been driven out of existence by the Pure Food Law.
This has naturally increased the sale of reliable remedies, and those that fulfill the provisions of the law. Hyomei, for example, has a larger sale than before, and Demaray still sells it under a guarantee that it will cure catarrh or the money will be refunded.
Breathe Hyomei three or four times daily through the neat pocket inhaler that comes with every outfit, and its healing air will reach the most remote parts of the nose, throat and lungs, killing all catarrhal germs and soothing and healing any irritation in the mucous membrane.
The complete Hyomei outfit costs $1. extra bottles, if needed, 50c and sold by Demaray under the guarantee that it will cure or cost nothing.
