s the pony picked its way up the id, rock bordered canyon Ivy Norris ok in great breaths of the ozone of Arizona foothills. "This is fiving!" she cried, throwing her arms. "The folks back home ould not know me. Dese three onths spent in this wonderful cliate have made me strong and young min. And this weather! Back in Hampshire they are having snow. hile out here it is golden sunshine all long. My heart is full of the day Thanksgiving! When I write back ne that I spent my Thanksgiving at in the foothills all alone the folks on't believe me. They'll simply say learning western ways fast-to anufacture some big ones to boom country." The last of August Ivy Norris, pale, in and thirty, had arrived from the ast to teach the Lone Mesa school. he cowboys on Mr. Tower's ranch. here she boarded and lodged, treated e coming of the cultivated little woan as a great joke. Her short skirts, e boots and the handsome little reolver and cartridge belt furnished em material for comment for weeks. ven Warde Hughes, the foreman, was mused at her first attempts to mount nd ride Pilot, the gentlest pony on the nch, but he equally enjoyed the pluck with which she persisted in learning ride and the use of the little revolver hat looked so comically dangerous in er small white hand.

On this Thanksgiving morning the indsome foreman had reined in his w pony behind a thicket of mesquite and was watelfing faithful old flot carefully bear his fair rider up he trail of Little Springs canyon. All it once he became aware of the fact hat a few months had wrought a reat transformation in the schoolcher of Lone Mesa. The thin form ad rounded out into graceful curves, he pale face had become plump and sy, and her awkwardness in the sade had given place to an easy manner nat could no longer be ascribed to a est edition of her species that ever struck these foothills. I wonder if she knows where she is going. She's a good ten miles from the ranch house now and still going on. Well, she's a pretty interesting stray, and I'm going to see that she doesn't get entirely

With this thought Warde Hughes entered another trail, then cautiously made a detour, coming back to the canyon just above Little Springs. Still concealed back of some manzanita bushes, he watched Ivy Norris come on up the rugged trail. She was singing a stanza of an old school song that he remembered, and the notes floated up to him on the warm November air sweet and clear as an angel's song. Suddenly she ceased, and she gianced quickly up the slope. Then, catching up her revolver, she sent a shot whizzing off into the chaparral. A tawny form dropped out of sight down the ravine.

"Ah," exclaimed the foreman admiringly, "she made Mr. Coyote hit the dirt as well as a soldier could have done it."

Guiding the pony to the springs, Ivy dismounted. While Pilot drank in long, satisfying quaffs from one of the little springs the young woman looked about her, noting the steep granite walls that surrounded her, the deep azure of the sky and the golden glow of the sunshine enveloping everything like a loving mother keeping a winter's chill at bay. Then she saw Warde Hughes approaching from an opposite

"May I join you, Miss Norris?" he asked.

"Certainly, Mr. Hughes," she answered. "It is noon, isn't it?" giving an odd little squint at the sun as if she were already enough of a plainswoman to estimate the time by its elevation. "It is about 12:30," said Hughes, with the old timer's accuracy.

Then it is time for my lunch, and I'm as hungry as that wretched coyote I shot at. It is Thanksgiving day, Mr. Hughes. I have beef sandwiches, olives, cheese, crackers and some fig wafers in my saddlebags. With New England hospitality I ask you to help me eat them."

"While it is not the custom of us castlemen to take a lunch at noon," he returned, looking into the bright eyes of the little woman before him, "I am glad to break the custom on this occa-sion by accepting your invitation."

Under a live oak they spread the paper napkins which Ivy had brought and arranged the lunch upon them. Hughes soon caught the happy spirit of his companion, and, throwing his mask of conscious restraint aside, he talked and laughed with her with the pleasure of a boy.

"The spring must furnish us ten, she said, handing Hughes her pretty sliver folding cup. He quickly filled it from the spring near by. Then he passed the cup to her. "I did not think of having company," she said apologetically, touching the rim daintily with her pretty lips. "I wish I had an-

"I'm gian you haven't," profested Hughes heartfly. "I like this one best," taking the cup from her hands and drinking.

For a minute lyy made no reply. Then she looked at the man sitting opposite her as if in doubt of his meaning. The next instant she smiled frank-

"Well, I think I do too." The half serious simplicity of her speech amused Hughes, and, throwing back his head, he laughed in real enjoyment.

said, still laughing. Hughes declared there never was such a lunch. The greatest Thanksgiving feast in the land was nothing compared with this. The cold, pure water which they sipped in such good comradeship from the one cup he was sure outrivaled the nectar of all the

All too soon it was finished, and they sat back under the live oak silent, but happy. Suddenly Ivy realized it was midafternoon and she had twelve miles to ride back to the ranch. Tomorrow there would be school and the old routine of duties. Today held sunshine, laughter, joy; the next would be filled with the daily grind and hard tasks. Watching her from under the wide rim of his hat, Warde Hughes saw the weary expression begin to settle over Ivy Norris' face, and he understood.

Left an orphan after finishing school his loneliness had driven him west Here temperate habits and sterling principles had won him success. Now a woman, loving the freedom of his hills as he loved it, had entered his life. Suddenly he beheld a vision-a vision of liberty for both. Immediate ly he felt an intuition that the lonell ness of both was at an end. The new life of sunshine, the sunshine of a wonderful love, was glowing for them. He yearned to tell her, to lift the shadows from the patient face, but the moment of realization was too blissful

A soft flush stole into her face, but she did not leave the strong arms
