

The Secret Of Dry Cleaning

is in using "Dry-Clean-O," a soaplike substance which, when added to gasoline, removes all dirt from the goods, just as ordinary soap does in water. Dry cleaning is not simply washing the goods in gasoline. This would be like washing in clear water—only a little of the dirt would be removed. All articles that are liable to shrink or be spotted by washing in water should be dry cleaned. "Dry-Clean-O" for sale by Six Venetians were in town Thursday and furnished some first-class music on the street near the depot. The gentlemen were splendid musicians, playing the harp and three violins. Two of the company were bicycle experts, and handled that machine in a way that left no doubt in the mind of those who saw them as to their ability in that line. In the evening they gave a dance at the skating rink which was attended by a large crowd, who fully appreciated the excellent music. The gentlemen left north Thursday morning.

T. P. Cramer and W. L. Ireland returned Tuesday from their hunting and fishing trip on Big Grayback and Sucker creeks. The gentlemen had some packing experiences, they having packed six miles into the hills. They also had the novel experience of getting up at 3 o'clock in the morning and following an old hunter into the mountains to get into position for their game, which on this particular occasion, however, failed to put in appearance. Two large does passed through the hunting ground and could easily have been killed by the hunters had they been so minded, but they were looking for other game and secured it before returning to Grants Pass, in the shape of a fine, large buck. Fishing was not so bad either, the gentlemen securing 153 fine mountain trout, and didn't half try, so they say. Altogether the trip was a most enjoyable one.
