A Large City Continues Dry.

The following report of conditions in Worcester, Mass., appears in a Philadelphia paper. Worcester is a city of 140,000 inhabitants and after trying "no-license" votes again to do without saloons. The result of the experiment should satisfactorily answer the objection that prohibition is utterly impracticable in large cities.

For 12 months Worcester has been the largest city in the world without saloons. "No-license" was first carried in December, 1907, and in December, 1908, after seven months' trial, the city again voted no-license.

Records for the first full year of no-license, as compared with the preceding years under license, when there were 128 saloons and a score of wholesale liquor stores and hotels, show that under no-license there was less crime of all kinds, and not half as much drunkenness. At the city hospital there were only half as many alcoholic patients, and deaths from alcoholism decreased.

Police records show that the arrests for drunkenness numbered 3,924 for the license year, and 1,843, less than half, for the no-license year. Arrests for assault and battery were: License, 382; no-license, 255; neglect and non-support, license, 112; no-license, 87; disturbing the peace, license, 210; no-license, 109. While it may be a mere coincidence, it is a fact that under no-license the city's mortality rate fell 17 per cent.

In enforcing the no-license law 2,625 search warrants were issued and 381 arrests were made or summonses issued to appear in court. Of these cases, 346 were brought to trial, with the result that 51 were discharged, 241 were found guilty and appealed their cases to the Superior Court, 29 accepted jail sentences, 18 paid fines, three defaulted, two were bound over to the Superior Court, one case was placed on file and one was taken on probation.

A very profitable and helpful meeting was held last Friday at the home of Mrs. Graham on North Sixth street. After the business was finished the program was given as previously arranged under the direction of Mrs. Summers.

The music by Gordon Martin, violinist, and Miss Leila Caldwell, pianist, was greatly enjoyed. At the earnest request of those present they played again, each selection seemingly better than the last.

The vocal duet by Mrs. Forter and Mrs. Hackett was beautifully rendered and found a place in every heart. The "give and take" part of the program was very helpful indeed. This program was suggested by the thought that it is wrong to withhold from others what has been helpful to us.

The whole world likes a "good sport." By a good sport we mean one who will not only abide by the rules of the game but will also take honestly and cheerfully what the playing of the game dealt out to him.

In this sense the liquor men are not good sports. They appeal to the law but will not abide by the decision. Now, if two men had signed the articles for a fist contest and one of them was knocked out all sportsmen would demand that the loser should abide by the decision of the referee. If the defeated one should slip up behind his opponent and give him a rock in the back of the head there is not a "pug" in the land that would not denounce the outrage. Yet that is precisely what the liquor men are doing: they will not abide by the decision of the referee. Every police court, every Justice's court and every circuit court has up a lot of the sluggards of the law. Into every election they inject their issue, and the paramount object is to get men into office who will help them to override the decision of the referee. They are not good sports, and even the "pugs" should rule them out.

Judge Burnett is giving them their just dues, as is evidenced by the following news item:

Bootleggers Go to Jail.
Tillamook, Ore., Nov. 15.—Judge Burnett surprised the bootleggers, as well as the citizens, when he sentenced 11 of them this morning. Nine were sent to jail.

The judge said that Tillamook had the worst reputation for lawlessness of any county in his district and he would impose a jail sentence to punish those who had been violating the local option law and to a warning to others to obey the law.
