

TO THE HILLS

is the first thought now the hot weather has struck us at last. Remember before you start that you will want some good books to read. We carry a large number of the popular reprints and the very best sellers in the books just out. Among them are the following:

"A Life for a Life," by Her- rick.
 "The Ramrodders," by Hol- man Day.
 "The History of Mr. Polly," Wells.
 "The Seventh Moon," by Frederick Bartlett.
 "A Splendid Hazzard," by Harold McGrath.
 "By Inheritance," by Octave Thanet.
 "Nathan Burke," by Mary S. Watts.
 "The Losing Game," by Will Payne.
 "Cavanagh, Forest Ranger," by Garland.
 "A Modern Chronicle," by Churchill.
 "The Danger Trail," by Cur- wood.
 "The Land of Frozen Suns," Sinclair.
 The latter being specially recommended for Summer reading.

 Lester Kenney returned Friday from Portland, where he had spent two weeks with friends. He expects to return to that city in the near future, where he has a position with the telephone company as line repairer.
 E. L. Rogers, inventor of the Rogers' buttonhole cutter, metal punch and sawset, arrived here Saturday from Newark, N. J. He was accompanied by Douglas Ensey and the two gentlemen have been demonstrating this new device while en route to this city. Chas. Swinden, of this city, is a partner of Mr. Rogers in the manufacturing of the buttonhole cutter and the object of Mr. Rogers' visit to Grants Pass at this time is in the hope of forming a company and going into business here. The demand for this device has lately exceeded the supply, as it is an invention of merit, and the addition of this business would be a valuable acquisition to the city.

PARK PARTIES.

Many of our citizens who could not go to the neighboring towns to help celebrate our greatest of national holidays determined to have a little celebration of their own and the city park was chosen as the proper place.

So early in the day little groups of people, numbering from three to thirty, were found scattered around, under the shady trees and on the green grass, all seeming to enjoy the cool, beautiful day.

The biggest of these little parties was the Baptist people and a few invited friends, accompanied by well filled baskets and a big can of ice cream. Two of the gentlemen had resolved that a big Rogue river salmon was the proper thing to decorate the center of the big table, so early in the morning, equipped with the necessary regalia, they made a bee line for the river. Not returning, the ladies thought best to leave out of the menu salmon a la mode and prepare the belated dinner. In the fore part of the afternoon the two Isaac Waltons were seen approaching from the horizon of the river. They were immediately the center of attraction and as there were no visible signs of salmon, questions by the score were hurled at them of how and what and where was the catch? To all of which the gentlemen maintained a modest and discreet silence. However, if they did not bring back any "game" they did the proverbial fisherman's appetite. A dozen or more appointed themselves head waiters and soon enough food to supply a regiment was placed at the disposal, with all the knives and forks and spoons on the ground, including a big soup spoon brought for the purpose of dishing out the ice cream, and which one of the gentlemen accepted, much to the amusement of the onlookers. While these two gentlemen returned to the river, hoping for better luck, the rest of the company celebrated the afternoon in conversation, rowing on the river, teetering, swinging and playing in a number of youthful games, in which the gray haired boys and girls joined in the fun with as much relish and enthusiasm as the younger players. While the ladies were preparing a simple luncheon as a close to the day's festivities, some sweet evening songs were sung by Mr. Lovett and some members of his congregation, which was a fitting close to a day so pleasantly spent.
