MANY TROUT FOR HATCHING IN ROGUE

B. L. Jewell, in charge of the government fish station now being constructed at Fish lake at the head of the south fork of the Umpqua river 25 miles northwest of Crater lake, was in Medford Monday and Tuesday, purchasing supplies and getting a net to be used in catching the fish.

Mr. Jewell with six assistants went into the mountains ten days ago and established a camp. Returning from Drews the trip to Medford required four days' travel as the trails are wild and used very little. He reports game in abundance and fishing excellent. In some manner all the fishing tackle except one fly and a line was lost out, with these 100 rainbow trout were caught in 55 minutes, two men taking turns handling the rod. The station will be used only to obtain the eggs, which, when "eyed," will be packed to the Elk creek hatchery and from there distributed to all parts of the country. Transportation will be unusually difficult on account of the unused mountain trails.

The government fish bureau is somewhat short of funds and a number of enthusiastic nimrods have already donated substantial sums to aid the work. The members of the Rogue River Fish Protective association have raised $804 to be contributed to the fund.

A good share of the fish will be liberated in the Rogue river and other streams in this vicinity and the new station will receive the enthusiastic support of local fishermen.

ALFALFA RANK, OATS THIN IN DRY LAND

R. A. Gentry, farming on Applegate river, brought to this city yesterday a consignment of potatoes that were perfect. The potatoes were grown on Dr. R. R. Johnson's ranch, and were raised by dry farming methods. They sold for 4 1/2 cents.

Mr. Gentry stated that oats and alfalfa in his region were thriving, but that if one wanted to realize the value of alfalfa over other forage crops, that a field near him would demonstrate it. Oats are growing beside an alfalfa field. The oats are so high and the alfalfa double the height. The oat roots live on top of the ground; the alfalfa roots go deep in the soil to moisture. One is a most profitable crop, the other an indifferent crop.

Plant alfalfa, says Mr. Gentry.

JOSEPHINE COUNTY IS GOOD ENOUGH FOR HIM

To the Editor of The Courier:

Charles Henderson, representing a party of German Americans, who came here about a year since, returned last week from a few months' investigating trip through Oregon, Washington and into British Columbia, where he went with the object of finding a better location for a colony of his people. He made his investigation independent of business men, mingling with laboring and industrial people. He tramped as a laboring man and automobile rides did not grace his itinerary.

The fields of productive industry were investigated, and resources, climate, water, products, labor and advantages in general for self-sustaining, increasing population received Mr. Henderson's close attention. He visited some prosperous communities and promising regions. Now, after a laborious, practical investigation our friend returns well satisfied with Josephine county. His people will remain and more will follow. They are located four miles west of Grants Pass, and are highly esteemed by the neighborhood for their sociability and practical industrial qualities. CRUDE OIL SMUDGE MAY RUIN FRUIT. The Kansas City Journal fears crude oil used as smudge by Kansas apple growers during the early spring will ruin the fruit for the market. That paper says: 'What will it profit the apple growers of Kansas if the state's greatest fruit crop this year is tainted with the flavor of crude oil? People will not buy apples that taste or smell of the smut and smoke of burning oil. Hundreds of orchardists are worrying over this matter. When a severe frost was threatened the owners of big apple orchards lighted the fires in thousands of crude oil stoves scattered among the blossoming fruit trees. Now they fear that the use of crude oil in these smudge pots may cause the loss of thousands of dollars' worth of fruit on account of the odor and taste left by the soot of the burning oil. They fear the orchard men and the commission houses are anxiously waiting for the fruit to mature to determine if any damage was done. 'Last year the oil was used by many fruit growers, but without damage, as the smudges were burned before the trees were in bloom and before the leaves came out. This year the trees were in full bloom and in two-thirds of the state the fruit had been formed and the leaves were out when the frost signals came from the weather bureau. 'The burning oil makes a heavy black smudge and thick soot was deposited on the foliage and petals of the flowers and on the small fruit deep down among the petals. It is feared that this soot will be taken into the fruit and that the odor and taste will remain. When the oil was used last year the trees were out in bloom or in leaf, and the soot was washed off the limbs and twigs before the fruit was formed. Fruit growers say the soot collected on the leaves and blossoms and remained there because no general rain followed to wash it off. They fear the orchard men and the commission houses are anxiously waiting for the fruit to mature to determine if any damage was done.'
