WOODVILLE HEREAFTER BE KNOWN AS ROGUERIVER.

Woodville, the classic city by the Rogue, will, after July 1, no longer be known by the name that suggests sylvan retreats, glinting shadows in and out among the trees, and owls that hoot, but will be dubbed "Rogueriver." The great republic of the United States of America has given consent, and provided for change of name in all postoffice printed matter, and in the postal directory of the United States.

Citizens of Woodville have been active in their efforts looking to the adoption by the government of the new name, and now that they have succeeded they are much pleased.

"The name 'Rogueriver' will fit the little city to perfection," said a citizen of Woodville; but a resident of the valley suggested that the new name would create confusion. The latter's contention is that when a person remarks "I am going to Rogueriver," it will not be clear whether the individual means that he is going to the stream by that name or to the town. When seen in print no mistake will be made, as the two words Rogue and river are used as one, Rogueriver." Others say if Woodville wants to change its name what business is it of outsiders to object to any name the little city chooses to adopt? "And there you are."
