LELAND MAN THOUGHT BROTHER WAS A DEER—A near-fatality of the "thought it was a deer" type, occurred on Myrtle creek, in the Glendale district Thursday afternoon, when one of the two Miller brothers of Leland shot and slightly wounded the other. The boys were hunting along the creek when the younger brother, 17 or 18 years of age, saw a form moving indistinctly through the brush, and thinking it a deer took aim and fired. The bullet, a copper-jacketed one of .30 calibre, was somewhat deflected from its course by striking a twig, and the jacket stripped from the leaden part of the bullet by the same twig. The jacket struck the brother over the chest, but did not penetrate the cavity, and the rest of the bullet glanced along the top of Miller's head, making a scalp wound that is not considered serious. The injured man is about 21 years of age. Young Miller was hastened to the farm home of Oliver McGee, where he was given such treatment as was at hand, and then left for Glendale, where the wounds will be dressed by a physician. The shot was fired at a distance of only about fifty yards, and as the aim seems to have been true, but for the twig there is no question but that the first fatal accident of the deer hunting season in southern Oregon would have been recorded.

O'RILEY WOULD SELL CITY AN INCINERATOR H. P. O'Riley, representing the Conley Incinerator company, spent Monday in the city interesting the city officials and others in the construction of an incinerating plant in this city to take care of the garbage question. Mr. Riley states that many of the smaller cities are building incinerators, the expense being much less for an up-to-date plant than is generally supposed. An incinerator of a ton capacity for each thousand inhabitants is required, and the cost is about $1,000 for each ton of capacity. For Grants Pass the plant would cost $5,000, and as the institution is erected upon the unit plan, other units could be added as required. This figure includes a brick building of attractive architecture, and an incinerator that is both odorless and smokeless, and not only the ordinary garbage is disposed of through it, but the carcasses of deceased animals are also destroyed in it.
