RIDDING ALFALFA OF THE DODDER PEST.

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Ore., Sept. 2.—In small patches dodder may be eradicated by mowing with a scythe before it ripens its seed and when the mowings are dry covering the infested spots with straw and burning them off," says Professor Scudder, agronomist at the Oregon Agricultural College.

"When the entire field has become so badly infested that it is not practicable to burn the infested spots, the best thing to do is to clip the alfalfa before the dodder seeds begin to ripen. The land should then be plowed and put into a cultivated crop such as corn, potatoes, or roots. This can be followed with grain. At the end of three years if the ground has been kept free of dodder, it may be put back into alfalfa.

"Dodder is a leafless, slender vine, whitish yellow in color, bearing clusters of white blossoms which ripen into abundant seed, sometimes as many as three or four crops in a season. Although of parasitic habits the seed germinates in the soil sending up little tendrils which attach themselves to the alfalfa or clover stalks, winding about the stem and living upon its sap until the alfalfa turns yellow and dies.
